POETRY.

CONTEMPLATION.

"They are all up—the innumerable stars—
And hold their place in heaven. My eyes have been Searching the pearly depths through which they spring
Like beautiful creations till I feel
As if it were a new and perfect world,
Waiting in silence for the word of God
To breathe it into motion. There they stand.
Shining in order, like a living hymn
Written in light, awaking at the breath.
Of the celestial dawn, and praising Him
Who made them, with the harmony of spheres.
I would I had an eagle's ear to list.
That melody. I would that I might float
Up in that boundless element and feel
Its ravishing vibrations, like the pulse
Beating in heaven! My spirit is athirst
For music—rarer music! I would bathe
My soul is a serener atmosphere
Than this; I long to mingle with the flock
Led by the 'living waters,' and to stray
In the 'green pastures' of the better land!
When wilt thou break, dull fetter!—When shall I
Gather my wings, and like a rushing thought
Stretch onward, star by star, up into heaven!"
Thus mused Alethe. She was one to whom
Life had been like the witching of a dream,
Of an untroubled sweetness. She was born
Of a high race and lay upon the knee,
With her soft eyes perusing listlessly
The fretted roof, or, on Mosaic floors,
Grasped at the tesselated squares inwrought
With metals curiously. Her childhood passed
Like faery—amid fountains and green haunts—
Trying her little feet upon a lawn
Of velvet evenness, and hiding flowers
In her sweet breast, as if it were a fair
And pearly alter to crush incense on.
Her youth—oh! that was queenly! She was like
A dream of poetry that may not be
Written or told—exceeding beautiful!
And so came worshippers; and rank bowed down
And breathed upon her heart-strings with the breath
Of pride and bound her forehead gorgeously
With dazzling scorn, and gave unto her step
A majesty—as if she trod the sea.
And the proud waves, unbidden, lifted her!
And so she grew to woman—her mere look
Strong as as a monarch's signet, and her hand
The ambition of a kingdom. From all this
Turned her high heart away! She had a mind,
Deep, an immortal, and it would not feed
On pageantry—She thirsted for a spring
Of a serener element, and drank
Philosophy, and for a little while
She was allayed,—till, presently it turned
Bitter within her, and spirit grew
Faint for undying water. Then she came
To the pure fount of God, and is athirst
No more—save when the fever of the world
Falleth upon her, she will go, sometimes,
Out in the starlight quietness, and breathe
A holy aspiration after heaven.

THE REGICIDE'S CHEESE AND BROMSTICK,

BLACKWOOD has a good article in the March number, relating to the Regicides who took refuge in New England; from which the following incident, of both historical and local interest is taken:

"A story is told of one of the Regicides while living at Cambridge, which deserves preservation; as it not only illustrates the open manner in which they went to and fro, but also shows how well exercised were the soldiers of Cromwell in military accomplishments A fencing master had appeared at Boston, challenging any man in the colonies to play at swords with him; and this bravado he repeated for several days, from a stage of Thespian simplicity, erected in a public part of the town.

"One day as the mountebank was proclaiming his defiance, to the terror and admiration of a crowd of bystanders, a country bred fellow, as it seemed, made his appearance in the assembly, accepting the challenge, and pressing to the encounter with no other weapon than a cheese, done up in a napkin, for a shield and a broomstick well charged with puddle water, which he flourished with quixotic effect as a sword. The shouts of the rabble, and the confusion of the challenger, may be imagined; but the countryman, throwing himself into a position lustily defied the man of foils to come on A sharp command to be gone with his nonsense, was all the notice which the other would vouchsafe; but the rustic insisted on having satisfaction, and so stubbornly did he persist in brandishing his bromstick and opposing his cheese, that the gladiator in a towering fury, at last drove at him desperately enough.

"The thrust was very coolly received in the soft and savory shield of the countryman, who instantly repaid it with a dexterious daub with his broom, soaking the beard, and whiskers of the swordsman with its odorous contents. A second and more furious pass at the rustic was parried with masterly skill and activity, and rewarded with another salute from the broomstick, which ludicrously besmeared the sword-player's eyes, the crowd setting up a roar of merriment at his crest fallen appearance.

"A third lunge was again spent upon the cheese, amid shouts of laughter; while the broomsman mopped nose, eyes and beard, of his antagonist's puffing and blowing physiognomy. Entirely transported with rage and chagrin, the champion now dropped his rapier and came at his ridiculous adversary with the broadsword.

"Hold, hold; my good fellow, said Broomstick, 'so far all's fair play! but if that's the game, have a care, for I shall certainly take your life!"

"At this the confounded gladiator stood aghast. and staring at the absurd apparition before him, cried out amid the jeers of the mob:

"Who is this? there were but two in England that could match me! It must be Goffe, Whalley or the Devil!" And so it proved, for it was Goffe."

A LAW STUDENT IN ALABAMA.

An exchange says: Mr. C., who studied in some town of some State, emigrated to Alabama for his examination.

"Judge P.," says Mr. C.'s friend, "is now in the village, will you go and stand your examination?"

Of course C. consented. He had been several days anxiously waiting for the Judge at the——Exchange, alias grocery, ——, alias doggery. After the formality of an introduction, the Judge said:

"Well, Mr. C., you want to be examined for admittance to the bar."

"Yes, sir."

"Well, sir, let's take something to drink. Barkeeper, give us two juleps."

"Mr. C., can you swim?"

"Yes, sir, I can," said C., greatly surprised.

"Well, sir, let's take another drink.—Barkeeper, two cocktails."

The cocktails vanished, and the Judge said—

"Mr. C., have you got a horse?"

"Certainly, sir." said C.

"Very good," said the Judge, as soberly as though charging a Grand Jury.—"Mr. C., if you please, we will take a drink. Barkeeper, two toddies.

The toddies disappeared, and C. owns he began to feel rather queer.

"Mr. C.," said the Judge, "can your horse swim?"

"Yes sir, he can—for I have tried him from necessity."

"Then, sir," said the Judge, with increased gravity, "your horse can swim—and I think you are well qualified for an Alabama lawyer. Give me your commission and I will sign it. Meanwhile, barkeeper, give us two punches for my friend, Mr. C., and myself.

"Mr. C. continued the Judge, "I drink success to your admission to the Alabama bar."

A GENIAL AND HAPPY DISPOSITION finds materials of enjoyment every where. In the city, or the country—in society, or in solitude—in the hum of the multitude, or in the silence of the mountains, are alike materials of reflection and elements of pleasure. It is one mode of pleasure to listen to the music of "Giovanni," in a theatre glittering with light, and crowded with elegance and beauty: it is another to glide at sunset over the bosom of a lonely lake, where no sound disturbs the silence but the motion of the boat through the waters A happy disposition derives pleasure from both, a discontented temper from neither, but is always busy in detecting deficiencies, and feeding dissatisfaction with comparisons. The one gathers all the flowers the other all the nettles in his path. The one has the faculty of enjoying everything, and the other of enjoying nothing. The one realises all the pleasure of the present good; the other converts it into pain, by pining after something better, which is only better because it is not present, and if it were present, would not be enjoyed. These morbid spirits are in life what professed critics are in literature; they see nothing but faults, because they are predetermined to shut their eyes to beauties. The critic does his utmost to blight genius in its infancy; that which rises in spite of him he will not see; and then complains, of the decline of literature.

THE NIGHTINGALE.—A countryman one day went to the mansion of a wealthy lord. Here he heard the singing of a bird in a gilt cage. On approaching it, he saw it was a nightingale. With a feeling of melancholy, he stood and leant upon his staff and listened to the song.

Then the servants of the rich man came to him, and said, "Wherefore art thou amazed that thou standest thus muzing there?'

"I am amazed," answered the countryman, "that your master can bear the sad notes of the imprisoned bird in your splendid mansion."

"Thou fool," replied one of the servants, "does the song of the nightingale seem sad to thee in thy fields and woods?"

"No," rejoined the farmer; "there its song fills me with delight and admiration."

"Are its notes, then, different, there?" asked the man, with a contemptuous smile.

"Certainly," said the conntryman. "Our nightingales, amidst sprays covered with leaves and blossom, chant the praises of renewed Nature; they sing, under the open canopy of heaven, the song of liberty, and over their brooding mates the notes of love."

At this, the servants raised a loud laugh and called the countryman a simple clown. But he held his peace and returned quietly to his cottage and his fields.—Krummacher.

Does not Santa Anna fully understand the meaning 'leg bail,' when he leaves his leg in the place of his body: and will his last testament hold good, if as at present he has no leg-at-ease, (legatees)?

A woman at the South was relating her experience to a gaping congregation of darkies; among other things she said she had been to heaven. One of the brethren says: 'Sister, you see any black folks in heaven. She replied, 'O, ge away, Sam, lon't put a body out; 'spose I go into de kitchen when I was dar?'
