AMERICAN SCULPTORS IN ITALY.

The foreign correspondent of the Boston Atlas has a letter about the American sculptors, who are pursuing their art in Rome. Powers, Greenough and Crawford form a triumvirate of which the country has reason to be proud. Their distinctive excellence is thus pointed out by a writer in the Atlas:

Crawford is probably better than either in the grouping and expression of his figures. Powers excels in the beautiful finish of his marble, and Greenough certainly has a grander conception than either of them. Powers has at length accomplished his long cherished desire of sending his statue of a Greek Slave to the United States for exhibition, having shipped it from Leghorn for New York. It is thus spoken of by the critic:

The slave differs from a Venus merely in the accessory of a chain on one of the lower limbs, and is decidedly the chef d'œuvre of modern sculpture, though not entirely free from fault—it is rather stiff when looked upon from the right side, and the lower limbs are certainly subject to the same fault. Powers commits the great fault of repeating this statue, instead of striking into the higher region of his art, and executing a group. His Eve has also been repeatedly re-modelled, and the last re-production is lengthened out so as to improve the effect. He is now at work on a statue of J. C. Calhoun, a few inches larger than life, after which he will execute a statue of Benjamin Franklin, for New Orleans.

Of Crawford and Greenough we have this account:

"Mr. Crawford left for Florence on his way to Venice, where he proposes spending the summer months. There is a life and spirit about his works not to be found in the studios of Powers or Greenough, but he is not very prolific. The Daughter of Herodias is an exquisite composition, representing her going for the head of St. John, by order of her mother, with her timbrel and a vase. The dress of the dancing girl is elaborately executed—the pose naturally graceful, and the drapery worthy of high commendation. A bust of Mrs. Crawford, in which a flying veil is used to give effect to the head, finds many admirers, although the artists criticise it severely.

"Mr. Greenough, as independent as he is bold in his designs, is understood to be quite satisfied that his Washington is put out of doors—it is what he wanted. He is now modelling a group which is said to be of high merit, but I have not seen it. He is also bringing out an episode to his own history—to commemorate the anonymous assistance he once received when almost despairing—$1,500 to enable him to study in Italy—a bas relief, representing a young student working despairingly by a dying lamp, which is replenished with oil from a vase held by a hand coming from the darkness above. Thorwaldson conceived nearly the same design to commemorate a similar benefaction."

Another young artist by the name of Mosher is spoken of as just commencing. Having executed several heads of merit, he has now attempted an imaginative work, a bust of Pocahontas; and so far as I can judge, says the correspondent of the Atlas, he has succeeded most admirably in combining classic beauties with the peculiarities of the Indian physiognomy, and the queenly expression which is said to have belonged to the savage heroine.—Mosher has several orders for this work, and will yet make a noise in the world.

A VISIT TO MR. CLAY AT ASHLAND, KY.

Our old correspondent, G. W. Cutter, Esq., has just returned from Lexington, where he went on a visit to the Hon. Henry Clay. He describes that gentleman as being in excellent health, but very much bowed down under a sense of deep affliction, brought upon him by the loss of his son, the lamented Col. Clay. He says that, from the newspaper accounts of Mr. Clay, he was not prepared to see so vigorous an old man as he found him to be.—That his mind and feelings seem to bear all the freshness of youth, but rendered doubly interesting by the the mournful tinge that sorrow has cast upon him.

The object of Mr. Cutter in visiting Ashland was to place in the hands of Mr. Clay the pistols which were handed to him on the field of Buena Vista, by Col. Clay, at the moment when he could no longer hold them himself. It will be remembered that he was strictly charged by the dying officer to take care of those pistols, and he did not think that the obligation imposed by that charge was fully met on his part, until he had deposited the pistols in the hands of the distinguished father of the deceased. He says that the emotions of Mr. Clay were truly painful to witness, at the moment he presented his charge; but that with the strength of mind so peculiar to himself, he soon measurably overcame his sorrow, and conversed for a short time upon the manner of his son's death. He said that he was not apprized what the circumstances might be of the parents or relations of those who fell in attempting to save his son, that he was not wealthy himself, but that he had it in his power and would esteem it a pleasure to contribute to the aid and comfort of any parent who, from such loss, might be in need of assistance.

He said that it had been his intention to present Mr. Cutter with the pistols of his son, but that some of his family had expressed a desire to retain them for his little grandson, the son of Col. Clay, but he would be glad if Mr. C. would suggest some other present as a remembrance of the deceased, and a token of his own feelings. Upon being assured by Mr. Cutter that nothing of the kind had been expected as Mr. C. felt that he had only discharged a duty which any other officer of the Regiment would have performed, had chance placed them in the immediate situation he occupied at the moment of the melancholy event. He then said it was his intention to present Mr. C. with a ring, containing a lock of the hair of the deceased, and requested Mr. Cutter to remain until one could be procured. The circumstances of Mr. C. not permitting him to remain absent from home so long, it was arranged that the ring should be transmitted to him at Covington, through the hands of the Hon. James T. Morehead.—Cincinnati Com.

A Congress of Nations.—It is proposed that a congress of representatives from all commercial countries should assemble at Brussels, in the kingdom of Belgium, during the month of September next, to take into consideration the question of the influence of free trade and protection upon the relations of nations, and their mutual interests. Already many distinguished representatives from England, France, Germany and Italy have given notice of their intention to take part in the discussions, and an invitation to the citizens of this country to be present by their representatives has been given. This invitation to persons of all opinions on this subject comes from the Belgium Free Trade Association, and is presented through the Belgium commissioner at New York, we are informed by the Evening Post.

A Writer in the Boston Chronotype, describing a visit to the "Tombs" in the city of New York says:—

We called in at the "Tombs" this forenoon, where our old friend, and the friend of the drunkard, Colonel Larkin Snow, figures as Clerk of the Police Court. We were kindly conducted by him through the various departments of the prison.—Col. Snow pointed me to a pitiful looking man seated at a little distance from the rest, and asked me if I did not recognize the countenance. I told him I thought I did, and asked him who he was. Whereupon Col. S. related the following incident:

Last Sunday, said he, I was passing Tammany Hall, and saw, sitting upon the stoop, a man with his head buried in his hands, and covered all over with flies. The poor fellow was almost naked, said the Col.; I shook him and asked him who he was.—He looked up and called me by name, saying at the same time, that he only wished for a place to die! I gazed upon his disfigured features, added the Colonel, and was horror struck at the mighty change!—I recognized in him a man who was, a few years ago, editor and proprietor of one of the most respectable daily journals of the City of Boston! The man who was a partner with him then is now conducting the same paper under a new head. He was correspondent of the National Whig Organ for some time—was at the Inauguration of Harrison at Washington, and introduced two gentlemen to Webster and Clay who have since seen him in his present low situation in the Tombs. He looks bad, but the Colonel says he means to make a man of him yet. He had a letter in his pocket that he received from his wife who lives in Boston—"and," stammered out the sorrow stricken man, "she begins as she always did!" and burst into a flood of tears. Curiosity called the Colonel's attention to the letter, and it began thus:—"My ever dear Husband!" What a sad picture!

Last Sunday a meeting was held in the Tombs, during which time two men were dying with the delirium tremens. Twenty six took warning and signed the pledge. Friend Snow tells me a man was kicked out of a rum shop, night before last, and brought to the tombs, and died in a few minutes afterwards.

WADLEIGH'S TRIAL FOR SLEEPIN' IN MEETING.

Justice Winslow.—What do you know about Wadleigh's sleeping in meeting!

Witness.—I know all about it; 'taint no secret, I guess.

Justice.—Then tell us all about it, that's just what we want to know.

Witness—(scratching his head.)—Well the long and the short of it is, Wadleigh is a hard working man; that is, he works mighty hard doing nothing; and that is the hardest work there is done. It will make a feller sleep quicker than poppy-leaves. So it stands to reason that Wadleigh would naterallybe a very sleepy sort of person. Well, the weather is sometimes naterally considerable warm, and Parson Moody's sarmons is sometimes rather heavy-like.

"Stop, stop!" said Justice Winslow—"No reflections upon Parson Moody; that is not what you were called here for."

Witness.—I don't cast no reflections on Parson Moody. I was only telling what I knew about John Wadleigh's sleeping in meeting; and its my opinion, especially in warm weather, that sarmons that are heavy-like, and two hours long, naterally have a tendency—

"Stop, stop! I say," said Winslow—"if you repeat any of these reflections on Parson Moody again, I'll commit you to the cage for contempt of court.

Witness.—I don't cast no reflections on Parson Moody. I was only telling what I know about John Wadleigh's sleeping in meeting.

Squire Winslow.—Well, go on and tell us all about that. You wernt't called here to testify about Parson Moody.

Witness.—That's what I am trying to do, if you wouldn't keep putting me out.—And its my opinion, in warm weather, folks is considerably apt to sleep in meeting; especially when the sarmon—I mean especially where they get pretty tired. I know I find it pretty hard work to get by seventhly and eightly in the sarmon myself; but if I once get by there, I generally get into a kind of a waking train again and make out to weather it. But it isn't so with Wadleigh; I've generally noticed that if he begins to gape at the seventhly and eighthly, it's a gone goose with him before he gets through tenthly, and he has to look out for another prop for his head somewhere, for his neck isn't stiff enough to hold it up. And from tenthly up to sixteenthly he's as dead as a door nail, till the amen brings the people up to prayers, and Wadleigh comes up with a jerk, just like opening a jack-knife.
