POETRY.

OLD BACHELORS.

They are wanderers and ramblers—never at home.
Make sure of a welcome wherever they roam,
And ev'ry one knows that a bachelor's den
Is a room set apart for these singular men—
A nook in the clouds, of some five feet four,
Tho' sometimes, perchance, it may be more,
With skylight, or no light, ghosts, goblins and gloom,
And ev'ry where term'd the Bachelors Room.

These creatures they say are not valued at all
Except when the herd give a Bachelor's ball.
Then drest in their best,
In their gold 'broidered vest,
It is known as a fact,
That they act with much tract,
And they lisp out "How do?"
And they coo and they woo,
And they smile for a while,
Their fair guests to beguile,
Condescending and bending,
For fear of offending,

Though inert,	And they spy,
They exert,	With their eye,
To be pert,	And they sigh
And to flirt,	As they fly,
And they whisk, and they whiz,
And they frisk, when they quiz.
For they meet,	Advancing,
To be sweet,	And glancing,
And are fleet,	And dancing,
On their feet,	And prancing,

Sliding and gliding with minuet pace,
Pirouetting and setting with infinite grace,

And jumping,	And raching,
And bumping,	And chasing,
And stumping,	And pacing,
And thumping,	And lacing,

They are flittering and glittering, gallant and gay,
Yawning all the morning and lounging all day.
But when he grows old,
And his sunshine is past,
Three score years being told,
Brings repentance at last.
He then becomes and old man,
His warmest friends the frying pan,
He's fidgety, fretful and weary; in fine,
Loves nothing but self, his dinner and wine.
He rates and he prates,
He reads and debates.
Despised by the men, and the women he hates.

Then prosing,	And pouring,
And dozing,	And snoring,
And oozing,	And boring,
And snoosing,	And roaring,

When e'er he falls in with a rabble,
His delight is to vapor and gabble.

He's gruffy,	And musty,
And puffy,	And rusty,
And snuffy,	And tusty,
And huffy,	And crusty,

He sits in his slippers, with back to the door,

Near freezing,	And grumbling,
And wheezing,	And numbling,
And teazing,	And fumbling,
And sneezing,	And tumbling,

And curses the carpet, or nails on the floor;

Oft falling	Oft waking,
And brawling,	And aching,
And sprawling,	And quaking,
And crawling,	And shaking,

His hand is unsteady, his stomach is sore,

He's railing,	Uncheery,
And failing,	And dreary,
And ailing,	And teary,
Bewailing,	And weary,

Groaning and moaning,
His selfishness owning,
Grieving and heaving,
Though nought is leaving,
But pelf and ill health,
Himself and his wealth,
He sends for a doctor, to cure or to kill,
Who gives him advice, and offence and a pill
And drops him a hint about making his will,
As fearful antiquity cannot be mended,
The mis'rable life of a bachelor's ended,
Nobody misses him, nobody sighs,
Nobody grieves when a Bachelor dies.

KILLING A CAT.

Judge Halliburton tells an amusing story in a recent work called "The Old Judge, or Life in a Colony." It seems that the Governor of Halifax, Sir Hercules Sampson, with his lady and aides, had been invited to dine with a citizen of the place, who had made all possible arrangements for the reception of his pompous guest, and on his arrival the following incident took place;

Some of the party, following the example of his excellency, now took their seats; but the Governor, who had sat down on a small ottoman near Mrs. Channing, (the hostess,) was restless and uneasy. At first he drew himself a little forward, and then removed as far back as possible; and finally rose up and turned to ascertain the cause of the inconvenience he had experienced. He immediately exclaimed:

"Good God! I have killed this cat.—Was there ever any thing so awkward or so shocking?!"

Mrs. Channing said the cat was only worsted.

"Pardon me," he answered; "I wish with all my heart it was only worsted, for then there would be some hope of its recovery; but it is dead as Julius Cæsar!"

"I raised it myself, Sir Hercules!" she continued, "and—"

"Oh, if you raised it yourself, madame, it must have been a pet!" he replied; "and so much the worse for me. I beg ten thousand pardons! It is quite dreadful!"

Mrs. Channing exclaimed again, "It is only a bad piece of work, your excellency, and I—"—

"A bad piece of work, indeed!" said the inconsolable offender. "But the truth is My eyes have never recovered the injury they received in Egypt."

"It will rise again, I assure you, Sir Hercules. A good shake—"

'Never, never, my dear madam!" he persisted. "Cat though it be, if it had fifty lives instead of nine, it will never rise again!"

Here Lady Sampson came to the rescue. Taking an enormous eye glass, set with brilliants, out of her bosom, she examined the defunct cat, and (being able to see better than her husband) pronounced it to be a most beautiful piece of worsted work; and, on a nearer inspection, exclaimed, "But where did you get those beautiful eyes of yours, my dear Mrs. Channing? and those bright and sharp claws? I used to think my eyes and claws perfection, but they are not to be compared to yours."

At this Sir Hercules took his seat on a couch near by, first taking care to see that no cat had previously occupied it.

GERMAN ADVERTISEMENTS.

Something of the character of a people may be guessed from the advertisements in their papers. The Germans appear to have leisure to be sentimental or complimentary in their newspaper advertisements, which contain elegies for the departed, congratulations for birthdays, and various other private matters, with which one would think the public have no concern whatever. The Cologne Gazette contained some curious advertisements lately, from which we cull a few specimens:—"We beg Herr Berner for a repetition of 'Linda,' or to Herr Gerstel—we should like to see you again in the character of 'Melchoi.'" Signed, "Two gentlemen from Wiesbaden." Compliments and criticisms are offered to actresses in a similar style. Congratulations on birthdays are common; the following are two samples:—"To my dear fat friend and his good wife in Meurs, I wish much joy on the birth of their first daughter." "Many good wishes to Mdlle. Francisca, on this her birthday, from her good friends in Cologne." Inuendos, apparently directed against personal enemies, frequently appear. Of such advertisements the following are mild specimens:—"Maria! Why so pale? Do you tremble at the word?" Another is in rhyme:

"The owl avoids the light of day,
And hides herself in night;
Like ——, who never dare display
His actions in the light."

The following is aimed at some parsimonious gentlemen:—"Is it not the duty of gentlemen, when they receive a barrel of ale from the brewer, to treat the porters to a quart? Signed by several brewers' porter's. The advertisements for maid-servants are generally brief, only laying stress on "good sewing and ironing," but sometimes religion is included, as in the following:—"Wanted, a solid, young, evangelical maiden of all work." The next two refer to some delicate affairs:—"Sir Robert, I beg you will let me know the contents of the billet you have received by the postillion d'amour." "To T. N.—Must I not see you until Sunday? Ah, that you could know how tediously the hours will pass till the time arrives which will be the most important (may I hope the happiest also?) in my whole life." (No. 49.) For the following we can find no description:—"Wanted, a young, educated, and handsome maiden, as housekeeper to a single gentleman! All applications must be sent (sealed) to O. D. D."—Cologne Gazette Feb. 22d, 1847.
