POETRY.

I'LL PRAY FOR THEE.

TO——.

Who thou art I will not tell,
Yet I love thee, oh! how well!
When the daylight fades away—
And the moonbeams round me play—
When the glow worm on the ground
Sheds its brilliancy around—
When the fire flies so bright
Gleam like stars upon the night,
And thou'rt far away from me.
Then I'll breathe a prayer for thee.

When soft lamps around me gleam
And the winds with odors teem,
And bright eyes around me glance,
And fair forms so lightly dance—
When the red wine dyes the lip,
And of pleasure's draught all sip,
When gay hearts forget their care
And loud laughter fills the air;
And from sorrow all seem free,
Then I'll breathe a prayer for thee.

When the noise and mirth is stilled
And with peace the world seems filled—
When the moon begins to fade,
Leaving dark the hill and glade,
And the midnight air so sweet
Comes my burning brow to meet,
When the stars their vigils keep,
And the world is wrapped in sleep,
Deeply then and solemnly
I will breathe a prayer for thee.

When the sky is clouded o'er
And the rain-drops swiftly pour—
When the storm is brewing; fast
Then in fury comes at last,
Tossing with a giant might
Huge rocks down the mountain height,
Roaring, shrieking, yelling loud,
Like some demon fierce and proud,
Lowly then and fervently
I will breathe a prayer for thee.

When the midnight minster's bell
Sounds the hour of prayer to tell
Mother maiden, child and man,
Bend to Him who only can
Hear their prayers, remove their fears,
Calm their hearts or dry their tears—
When the holy thoughts arise
To the portals of the skies,
Then upon my bended knee
I will breathe a prayer for thee.

THE LAST MELODY.

THE EMPEROR ALEXANDER was dead. His next brother, the Grand-Duke Constantine, was the natural successor to the throne of Russia, but, by a deed, till then kept secret, Constantine, in Alexander's lifetime, had renounced his claim to the throne in favor of his younger brother, the present Emperor Nicholas. The accession of the latter to the throne, on the death of Alexander, not only excited general surprise, but an unsettled feeling soon manifested itself amongst the people and the army. The time appeared favorable for the breaking out of a conspiracy that had been forming for some years; and an insurrection took place at St. Petersburg, on Christmas day, 1825; but the movement of the conspirators was two hasty, and, their attempt not being well seconded by the troops, failed.

One hundred and thirty-six leaders of the rebellion were seized, tried and condemned; and almost all of them were sentenced to perpetual labor, or to exile in Siberia. The five principal chiefs were condemned to be broken on the wheel, but did not undergo that punishment, the gibbet being substituted by an ukase of the Emperor.

Among these five chiefs, the first and most remarkable was Paul Pestal, Colonel of the infantry regiment of Wiatka.

The long and arduous task to which he had devoted himself had not wholly engrossed the mind of this brave and persevering conspirator. Alive to the charms of the arts, he cultivated them with success, and in particular, he was an excellent musician.

The young and beautiful Catherine W——— had conceived a devoted attachment to Pestel. Gifted with an exquisite voice, she loved to sing his melodies.—The passion with which she inspired him was equally fervent as her own; and if ever the brave conspirator could forget his gloomy reveries, it was, when he was seated by Catharine's side, and dreaming of love and happiness.

On the eve of the day when the insurrection was to break out, Pestel more absorbed than usual, scarcely answered Catharine when she spoke to him, and at times seemed not to hear her.

"What ails you to-day, Paul?" she said, taking his hand, "you do not look at me—you do not speak to me as usual. I never saw you so cold, so absent when you were with me before."

Pestel looked at her sadly. "What would you do, Catharine, were you never to see me again?"

"I should die!" said Catharine, with enthusiasm, and then added, in a voice of terror,

"But, good God, why this question?—Paul, you cannot think of forsaking me?"

Pestel was silent.

"It cannot be," said Catharine; "you have sworn to love me till death,"

"Yes, Catharine while this heart beats it is yours. But," (embracing her with ardent but melancholy tenderness) he added, "promise me, Catharine, if I die that you will live for the sake of your old father, and that, even when I'm dead, I shall never cease to occupy your thoughts."

"I promise you to live as long as my grief will allow me. But, Paul, it is not I who shall have to undergo this cruel trial."

"There are presentiments, Catharine, which I cannot mistake," said Pestel, declining his head on his breast; "an inward monitor warns me that I must abandon my two visions of happiness—the bliss of living in the enjoyment of your love, Catharine, and the glory of securing the freedom and independence of my country."

"What do you mean?" said Catharine, whose fear and agitation increased every moment, "what mean these mysterious words, these gloomy predictions? Paul, you are concealing a secret from me."

"Yes, Catharine."

"A secret from me, Paul, who have never kept one from you!"

"You have had all mine—but this does not belong to me."

"Alas! if I imagined from your looks, your words, your thoughts of death and parting, it must be something very terrible!"

"It is terrible, indeed!"

After a moment's silence, Pestel continued,

"Hear me Catharine: when I give you my parting kiss this morning, it may perhaps be the last you will ever receive from me. But, whatever may be my lot, if you are told, 'Paul is dead,' come, and you shall find a remembrance of me for you! for I swear to you, Catharine, my last thought shall be of you."

Pestel's presentiment did not deceive him! He saw her no more.

The day after the execution of his sentence, a young female, bathed in tears, obtained permission to visit his cell. It was Catherine. After a long search, she discovered some lines of music penciled on the wall. Above them, there was only two words, "FOR HER!" Underneath was Paul's name.

Two years after a poor maniac died in a lunatic asylum, whose madness consisted in singing, every day, at the same hour, the same little melody that was pencilled on the wall of the cell. The poor maniac was Catharine—and the air she sang was —The last melody of Pestel.

JUST LIKE HIM!

Mr. Charles F. Hoffinan, Editor of the "Literary World," in noticing Montgomery's Life of Gen. Taylor, takes occasion to relate some anecdotes of the old hero, which refer back to the time when he was a Colonel in the Black Hawk war. Nothing could be more characteristic than the following:

"Some time after Stillman's defeat by Black Hawk's band, Taylor, marching with a large body of volunteers and a handful of regulars in pursuit of the hostile Indian force, found himself approaching the Rock River, then asserted by many to be the true northwestern boundary of the State of Illinois. The volunteers, as Taylor was informed, would refuse to cross the stream. They were militia, they said, called out for the defence of the State, and it was unconstitutional to order them to march beyond its frontier into the Indian country. Taylor thereupon halted his command, and encamped within the acknowledged boundaries of Illinois. He would not, as the relator of the story said, budge an inch further without orders.—He had already driven Black Hawk out of the State, but the question of crossing Rock River, seemed hugely to trouble his ideas of integrity to the constitution on one side, and military expediency on the other. During the night, however, orders came, either from Gen. Scott or Gen. Atkinson, for him to follow up Black Hawk to the last. The quietness of the Regular Colonel meanwhile, had rather encouraged the mutinous militia, to bring the proceedings to a head. A sort of town-meeting was called upon the prairie, and Taylor invited to attend. After listening for some time very quietly to the proceedings, it became Rough and Ready's turn to address the chair. "He had heard," he said, "with much pleasure, the views which several speakers had expressed of the independence and dignity of each private American citizen. He felt that all gentlemen there present were his equals—in reality, he was persuaded that many of them would in a few years be his superiors, and perhaps in the capacity of Members of Congress, arbiters of the fortune and reputation of humble servants of the R— public like himself. He expected, then, to obey them as interpreters of the will of the people; and the best proof he could give that he would obey them, was now to observe the orders of those whom the people had already put in the places of authority, to which many gentlemen around him justly aspired. In plain English, gentlemen and fellow-citizens, the word has been passed on to me from Washington to follow Black Hawk, and to take you with me as soldiers. I mean to do both. There are the flat boats drawn up on the shore and here are Uncle Sam's men drawn up behind you on the prairie."

"Stranger," added the man who had told the story, "the way those militia men sloped into those flat boats was a caution. Not another word was said. Had Zack Taylor been with Van Rensselaer at Niagara River, in the last war, I rather think he'd taught him how to get militia men over a ferry."

A FAIR HIT.—A curious story has lately been circulated respecting the King of Bavaria, who is said to have dreamed that he saw three rats, one of which was very fat, another very lean, and the last stone blind. The King sought an explanation of his dream, and was informed by a gypsy that the fat rat represented his favorite, Lola Montes, the lean one his people, and the blind one himself.

DR. EMMONS ON PREACHING.—A young man having preached for the Dr. one day, was anxious to get a word of applause for his labor of love. The grave Dr., however, did not introduce the subject, and his young brother was obliged to bait the hook for him. "I hope, sir, I did not weary your people by the length of my sermon to day?" "No, sir, not at all; nor by the depth either." Lastly the young man was silent.—Norfolk Democrat.

DR. MARTIN'S UNIVERSAL
PURGATIVE PILLS.

THESE PILLS have been used by Dr Martin in an extensive practice for many years, and with the greatest success especially in BILLOUS and LIVER DISEASES—They are also particularly recommended in Chronic diseases, such as Dyspepsia, Nervous diseases, habitual costiveness They may be taken in all cases when a purgative is needed with perfect safety. But of many certificates in our possession we shall only publish one from a highly respectable Physician.

Upper Hunting Creek, Caroline co. Md.
October 17. 1846.

Dr. George T. Martin.—Sir, having been made acquainted with the composition of your valuable Pill, by yourself some two or three years ago, I have used them freely in my private practice with entire success and shall continue to do so as long as I may practice medicine, and I now take great pleasure in recommending such a Pill as yours to the public as a safe and effectual purgative in all cases where a purgative is necessary.

Your's with respect
JOHN F BOON, M D.

We offer also MARTIN and WHITELEY'S NATIONAL TONIC a sure cure for the AGUE & FEVER. This valuable medicine is perhaps the best of the kind ever offered to the public. It is truly a scientific compound. In this remedy will be found all those qualities which must make it a general favorite in all Billous, or Malarious districts. With each bottle there will be a short treatise on fevers which is made comprehensible to every capacity. This Tonic will be found perfectly harmless as regards its effects on the constitution. By its action it restores the digestive functions to health, and speedily removes disease, and even the most inveterate cases of Ague and Fever. Prepared and sold by Martin and Whitley Wholesale druggist 320 Market Street Baltimore, and for sale by their agents.

DR. MARTIN'S COMPOUND SYRUP OF WILD CHERRY.

This compound is one of the best remedies ever offered to the public in Cough, whether arising from Colds, or the Hooping Cough, or that dreadful malady Consumption. Few remedies in the short time it has been before the Public, have effected so many cures The proprietors are every day receiving orders for it in this City, and at a distance, in which they have been highly gratified to learn its good effects. We have the permission of the Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal church of Maryland (the Right Rev. W, R. Whittingham) to say he has used the remedy in his own person with decided benefit. Our medical friends do not scruple to recommend it as one of the best remedies in Consumption Asthma &c which they have ever met with the following is from a highly respectable Physician on Kent Island to whom we made known the ingredients of the preparation.

Kent Island, June 22d, 1847.

Dr. G. T. Martin,

Dear Sir,—Since my return home I have prescribed your SYRUP of WILD CHERRY in several cases, one in particular a case of Asthma of long standing (about 12 years) a neighbor and patient of mine. Her disease has never been benefited by any medicine which she has taken, and for the last year or two she has been confined entirely to the house. I do not know that she has had a good nights rest for a long time, but since she commenced taking your medicine (and she has only taken one bottle) she is enabled to go to bed and sleep well all night. I think the medicine will make a perfect cure of her and she is determined to give it a fair trial. Her husband Mr. R Erickson is a merhant here, and says if you will send him some of it, he will act as your agent. I think you might send him some of your other preparations which will meet with ready sale. I send a small bill for medicines which you will please send me and

Oblige your's respectfully
