THE LATEST NEWS.—We hear that the Democrats of this County are circulating that Col. Thomas is to receive two thousand majority in Baltimore city and County. What say you Whigs of Baltimore to this? The democratic Candidate has just arrived in our County. Did he bring over this budget with him or whence comes it?

For the Easton Gazette.

A CARD.

I have been informed that late yesterday afternoon after I had left the Court House from fatigue and indisposition, Mr. Lecompte atributed to me a doctrine in reference to the rights of majorities which did me great injustice, and which I certainly never entertained or expressed. He is reported to have averred that in my speech at Cambridge, I denied in general terms the right of majorities to govern. I can only express my surprise at this declaration of Mr. Lecompte, and say he is altogether in error. I asserted no such doctrine, uttered no such sentiment, and I am at a loss to conceive how Mr. Lecompte should so understand me. The sentiment attributed to me in these broad and unqualified terms, is an absurdity; and I am sure the public has too much respect for my understanding and intelligence to suppose me capable of entertaining it.

To show that I maintained no such sentiment I will here state the doctrine I did advance on the occasion refered to, and I can do this with great certainty, for the point was well considered. I use the very words in which it was stated, as near as they can now be recalled:

"The Whig party," I stated, "were the "advocates of Republican government; "they believed that all political power "rightfully belonged to the people; that the "People were capable of self-government, "and entirely competent to decide all ques"tions involving their security and happi"ness. But they also believed in the ne"cessity of organized institutions, with "carefully distributed and strictly defined "powers; that public safety was only to "be secured by p eserving these inviolate; "that the will of the majority can properly be expressed only according to the "organic law; and when so exprassed it "had the right and ought to govern. There "was, however, another class of politi"cians," I added, "who contended that "the right of the majority is omnipotent; "that no matter how expressed, rising a"bove and beyond the constitution and "laws, and superior to both, the majority "had the right and the power to do what"soever it saw fit."

This latter sentiment I dissented from and argued against as dangerous and destructive. In the course of my remarks I stated that Mr. Lecompte in his address had used language which was uncertain on this point, and left us in doubt what he meant. If he intended to be understood as expressing the latter doctrine, I was ready to join issue with him; and I proceeded at once to point out the evil consequences which had resulted and were likely to result from it.

When Mr. Lecompte came to reply, instead of meeting and disputing the proposition I had made and argued, he at once assumed that I had denied the right of the majority to rule in general terms; and expended his eloquence on a proposition which no one had or will deny, and never met or touched the real point in question

I replied to Mr. Lecompte at once, exposed his evasion of the real point in issue, and corrected his error. Now after all this, that Mr. Lecompte could so continue to misunderstand me and put into my mouth sentiments I never expressed—sentiments which are absurd, pointless and silly—and then enlist all his powers of debate to excite the public mind against me because of them, I neither expected nor can account for. I can only say that in my judgment he would be much more likely to win the public regard if he would meet the questions really raised, and controvert and disprove the opinions and facts which I really maintain and express.

The debate at Cambridge was held by agreement between Mr. Lecompte and myself, and the debate was to be held here in the same way. The understanding was that I was to begin in Cambridge and he reply; and here he to begin and I to reply. On my part the understanding was faithfully adhered to; there I began and he replied. But when the time for the meeting here arrived, Mr. Lecompte had not come; the people were impatient and I was compelled either to go on without him or not speak at all. I spoke, was responded to by Mr. Martin, and rejoined in a few remarks. Mr. Lecompte arrived near the close of the debate, and near night. Fatigued and unwell I did not remain to hear him, and hence had not an opportunity at the time of responding to what he said. I have since been informed of the sentiments attributed to me, and as I shall probably not have another opportunity of addressing the people of this immediate vicinity, I have adopted this method of putting the matter right.

J. W. CRISFIELD.

Easton, Sept. 15, 1847.

For the Easton Gazette.

TO THE PEOPLE OF TALBOT COUNTY.

You haue doubtless seen in the columns of the Easton Star an attack on me, founded on a charge of warning off some Baltimore fishermen from Howell's Point.—The whole matter was unimportant and had passed off my mind, until some of my aristocratic neighbors of the opposite party who have little to do with me, or the fishermen of this county or elsewhere, except about election time, have just revived it on an eve of an election when I am now a candidate before you. The whole matter is fully explained by some friend over the signature of "Humanity," in the last Gazette. I deny ever having obstructed or attempted to obstruct the officers of justice in the discharge of their duties. That I may with some of my neighbors have proposed that the poor wretches might be let off for the first offence is quite probable—but nothing further. So much for these fish stories.

But I am now threatened with the circulation of another story—indeed it is already buzzed about, to wit: that I compelled a respectable man from Cambridge to lodge in my barn, refusing him a place under my roof. Those who know me would at once, I think, conclude such a story to be unfounded. The facts are these. In the spring of 1841 or 1842, some man from Cambridge came late in the evening to my house on a Sabbath day, and stated he had been caught on the Talbot side by a high wind and could not get over, and that he had three or four apprentices of a Mr. Straughon with him. I invited them in and gave them their suppers, and invited them to stay all night. The man said he would not stay in the house, because he must have the apprentices home next morning or Mr. Straughon would flog them—and that he proposed going in the barn and watching the weather, and starting as soon as the wind lulled, and that he did not want to disturb my family. They then went into my barn loft on some hay and staid there all night. Next morning, the wind still blowing, I found them there and took them to my house and gave them their breakfast, which was the last I saw of them and was the last I ever expected to hear of the matter. Below is the certificate of young Mr. Merrick of this district, then living with me, which will I trust stop this unfounded calumny upon me.

CHAS. H. BOWDLE.

Sept. 15, 1847.

I hereby certify that I lived with Chas. H. Bowdle, at the time stated above and was present, and that the above statement is a true statement of facts.

CALEB MERRICK.

Mr. Haas at Cambridge!—This great artist (the lion of daguerreotypists) is still in town, his intention of leaving for Easton three weaks ago proved a failure, as the overflowing run of his business here would not allow it. The greatest sensation has been produced amongst the ladies by his pictures. We heard a remark a few days ago which struck us with a great deal of truth in regard to the great skill shown in the taking of these pictures, "that there are many here who before could not bear a daguerreotype now perfectly admire them, since they have seen the great productions of this artist. His daguerreotypes have got so fashionable that many ladies who were so indisposed that they could not leave their homes have succeeded in obtaining them at their own residences.—Cambridge Chronicle.

Death of Lieut. Taneyhill.—A letter has been received by S. Taneyhill, Esq., of this city, from Assistant Adjutant Gen. W. H. Gray, at Tampico, dated August 25th, which states that Lieutenant Taneyhill of whose capture by the Mexicans we have heretofore given an account, was taken to Heujutla, by the Mexicans, with some other prisoners, w ere his wounds proved fatal, and he died on the 25th of July. The letter closes by stating that he was treated with great kindness by the Mexicans and had the best of medical skill and care.

HENRY CLAY—SILAS WRIGHT.

The National Intelligencer says—"A gentleman who has just arrived in this city from the White Sulpher Springs, Virginia, informs us that himself and a number of other gentlemen were in Mr. Clay's room a few minutes after he had heard of the death of the lamented Governor Wright.—Mr. Clay was deeply affected, and paid a touchingly beautiful impromptu tribute to the honored dead, by alluding to his generous nature, uncompromising integrity, accomplished powers in debate, and his eminent public services. Though politically opposed, these distinguished statesmen, in their frequent and unrivalled discussions of great national questions in the Senate of the Uni ed States ever maintained toward each other the highest respect and the warmest feelings of attachment. Honorable alike to the living and the dead is the incident here related, and we have pleasure in giving it to our readers."

In this town on Friday morning 14th ult., M. Olivia Key Bond, in the 18th year of her age.

Seldom has the author of these lines been called to record the death of one in whom were blended so much worthy to admire and love. The genius and intelligence of her character were only equalled by that modesty of d portment, and diffidence of pretension so rarely the accompaniments of these qualities. Gentle, affectionate, and confiding in disposition, she had gathered about her a wide circle of attached friends among her coevals, who continued to give proofs of regard, until the atest hours of her life. As a daughter she richly repaid in filial devotedness the wealth of affection lavishad upon her by a fond and indulgent mother, whose hopes and joys were buried with the relics of her only child. In a fresh morning of life she has been transfered by the wise Providence of God, from time to eternity—from earth to Heaven; and thus happily spared the cares an anxieties which crowd the the path of onward life.

"Happy they!
Thrice fortunate! who of that fragile mould,
The precious porcelain of human clay,
Break with the first fall, they can ne'er behold
The long year linked with heavy day on day,
And all which must be borne and never told!"
