...swering to Go this, he felt that the first condition of all imitative art, is truthfulness, and that how much soever ideality and imagination may embellish and ornament, this, at least this, must be there, as basis and reason for all the rest. He thought that his statue should represent and embody the idea of the great American orator and in order to do this, he must adopt, as far as possible, the costume of the period and of the individual. He felt that he must be true to history, and to nature, instead of bowing to the tyrannous dogmas of an arbitrary conventionalism, clad, tho' it were, in the robes, and wearing the insignia, of classical authority. I know there will be differences of opinion in regard to this matter, as there always have been, amongst persons of cultivation and taste;—I know there are those who prefer the costume of Chantrey's, or of Greenough's Washington to that of Houdon's, who say that the sharp angles and the awkwarp forms of modern dress are utterly destructive of all gracefulness and of all beauty in marble; but I cannot doubt that Mr. Hart, and those who think with him are right. I am straying from my own purpose which was not to write a criticism on art but to give you a short description of one of its latest, and, I think, one of its most admirable works.

Mr. Hart had a difficult matter to accomplish. He wished, as I have said, to give in marble a true and worthy representation of the American orator. To show Mr. Clay in the very act and moment of impassioned speaking,—his arms extended, and his lips apart,—would have been a piece of fool-hardy temerity, of which he has too much good sense, and good taste, to be guilty. Still, it was necessary to embody in his statue the idea of oratorical effort and action, and he has effected his purpose by choosing a moment just as the speaker has finished one of his fiery utterances, and is pausing for an instant, in mid career, ere he goes on,—as you may sometimes see an eagle poised absolutely motionless on his outspread wings, just at the doubling in the sweep of one of his majestic circles through the clear upper air. Mr. Hart has thus blended the idea and spirit of action, with the actual presence and exhibition of repose—the latter always so essential to the highest and most agreeable effect of the sculptor's art.

Mr. Clay is represented resting the weight of his body principally on the right foot, the left being thrown a little forward and the toes turned out. The head is sufficiently erect to give dignity and spirit to the general bearing, without approaching the offensive and vulgar line of arrogance, and self-esteem; and the face is turned slightly to the right, in the direction of the corresponding arm. The fingers of the left hand rest lightly and gracefully upon a pedestal appropriately placed while his right arm, just fallen from an uplifted position, is sufficiently extended from the elbow, to show, with the open and forward looking palm, action just finished instead of continuous and habitual repose. The face is full of lofty animation self-possession, and the rest of conscious power.

The costume is a simple citizen's dress, such as Mr. Clay usually wears. The coat, unbuttoned, is loose enough not to be stiff and formal; shoes are worn instead of boots, according to Mr. Clay's invariable custom; and the shirt-collar is turned down, not according to his custom, but as a matter of great convenience, if not of necessity, to the artist, in the exhibition of the neck and throat.

Mr. Hart goes to Europe early in the Spring, where he will stay for several years working out his designs, and studying his art. You will be gratified to know that the Virginia Ladies have dealt with him, in the most liberal and generous manner.—He will probably make his artist-home in Florence; and, although it may be hoping wildly, to hope that he will ever match the skill of his western confrere, whose Greek Slave has, at last, rivalled, if it has not eclipsed the immortal beauty of the Medicean Venus, that he will prove himself worthy of his delightful art, and that he will add to the glory which this art has shed upon his country, his works already done, and his earnest and truthful character, give ample and full assurance.

Very sincerely yours,

ELISHA BARTLETT.

JENNY LIND AND THE COTTAGERS.

It seems, that Miss Jenny being one of those young ladies who much delight to see what can be seen, while staying at the Bath Hotel, ordered out her carriage, and accompanied by her friend Mrs. Grote and other parties, took a drive, for the purpose of enjoying the beautiful scenery for which our much-favored neighborhood is so celebrated. Among other places thus visited, was the picturesque village of Henbury; and here, as a matter of course the party were shown the Henbury Cottages. Jenny was much gratified, nay, positively enchanted. She praised the neat arrangements of this peaceful spot, in whose very quietude and simplicity she seemed intuitively to sympathise. Having taken the round, and surveyed the exterior of the buildings, she at last entered one of the dwellings, where she was received by two of the aged occupants The old women were busily employed with their knitting, while high above them in a cage, a prisoned blackbird warbled its wood-notes wild making the lowly cot resound with its charming melody. The old cottagers and Jenny were soon on intimate terms; she examined their knitting, and chatted away in a most affable manner "What a beautiful bird is yours," she at last remarked. "Yes, my lady, 'tis indeed a pretty creetur; we calls un Jenny Lind." "Oh! indeed," remarked Jenny, with a smile; "I fear you are too complimentary to that person; have you ever heard her sing?" "La! no, my lady; it ain't the likes of we as she would care to sing to." "Then would you like to hear her, do you think?" "Ah! that I should indeed," was the reply of one. "And I too," said the other; "she must be a dear creetur."—"Well, then," said the fair questioner, as something very like a tear glistened in her clear blue eyes, "I am Jenny Lind, and I shall be happy to gratify you;" whereupon she immediately sang one of her pretty melodies, to the great delight of her aged auditors, who with many protestations of thankfulness, vowed that they should "long remember the day when the sweet young lady paid 'em a visit."—Bristol Mirror.

Dyspepsia Cured.

MARTIN & WHITLEY'S NATIONAL TONIC is the best remedy ever offered to the public in all cases of Dyspepsia and Ague and Fever. A healthy condition and a natural action of the functions of the Stomach and Liver are necessary to healthy Digestion. The Stomach has been called the centre of Sympathies. It may therefore be truly said there is no disorder of the humane body, which does not, more or less, affect the functions of the Stomach. "Indigestion is rarely, if ever the sole cause of organic disease of the Stomach" It is however a very fruitful source of it in other parts of the system. It is, then, evident whatever will restore the tone or healthy action of the Stomach, when impaired by disease, is the only proper Medicine as a curative. Such, we feel assured is the national Tonic.

We give below a certificate of a highly respectable gentleman, a merchant in Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, who last summer came to consult a distinguished Physician in this City. He had also sought the aid of several, who rank high in their profession in Philadelphia, and in the State of Pennsylvania. But hearing of this Tonic, determined to use it as directed. and the result has been, as he says a perfect cure.

Church Town, Cumoerland Co., Pa., Nov 3d 1847.

Messrs. Martin & Whiteley,

Gentlemen—I have used your preparation called Fever and Ague Tonic, for the cure of Dyspepsia, and am happy to inform you that it has cured me of the most obstinate and inveterate case of Dyspepsia. I therefore recommend it to all similarly afflicted.

Yours, CARY W. AHL.

N B.—I consider myself perfectly cured of Dyspepsia.

Price $1 per bottle. Around each bottle there is a short treatise on those diseases.—Prepared and sold by Martin and Whiteley, at their wholesale Drug Store, 320 Baltimore street.

THE WEEKLY
NATIONAL WHIG.

ONE of the largest newspapers in the United States, is made up from the columns of the Daily National Whig, and is published every Saturday for the low price of two dollars per annum payable in advance.—A double sheet of eight pages will be given whenever the press of matter shall justify it.

The NATIONAL WHIG is what its name indicates. It speaks the sentiments of the Whig party of the Union on every question of public policy. It advocates the election to the Presidency of ZACHARY TAYLOR, subject to the decision of a Whig National Convention. It makes war to knife upon all the measures and acts of Administration deemed to be adverse to the interest of the country, and exposes without fear or favor the corruption of the party in power. Its columns are open to every man in the country for the discussion of political or any other questions,

In addition to politics, a large space in the National Whig will be devoted to publications upon Agriculture, Mechanics, such other useful arts, Science in General, Law, Medicine, Statistics, &c. Choice specimens of American and Foreign Literature, will also be given including Reviews &c. A weekly list of the Patents issued by the Patent Office will likewise be published—the whole forming a complete family newspaper.
