SEVENTEEN.

I have a fair and gentle friend.
Whose heart is pure, I ween,
As ever was a maiden's heart
At joyous seventeen.
She dwells among us like a star,
That from its place of birth
Looks down, yet gathers not a stain
From aught it sees on earth.

I do not mean that flattery
Has never reached her ear;
I only say its syren song
Has no effect on her;
For she is all simplicity,
A creature soft and mild—
Though on the eve of womanhood,
In heart a very child.

And yet, within the misty depths
Of her dark, dreamy eyes,
A shadowy something, like deep thought,
In tender sadness lies;
For though her glance still shines as bright
As in her childish years,
Its wildness and its lustre now
Are softened down by tears—

Tears that steal not from hidden springs
Of sorrow and regret,
For none but lovely feelings
In her gentle breast have met;
For every tear that gems her eye,
From her young bosom flows,
Like dew-drops from an op'ning flow'r,
Or sweetness from a rose.

For e'en in Life's delicious spring,
We oft have memories
Which throw around our sunny hearts,
A transient cloud of sighs;
For a wondrous change within the heart,
At that sweet time is wrought,
When on the heart is softly laid,
A spell of deeper thought.

And she has reached that lovely time,
The sweet, poetic age,
When to the eye each flower'et's leaf
Seems like a glowing page;
For a beauty and a mystery
About the heart is thrown,
When childhood's merry laughter yields
To girlhood's softer tone

I do not know if round her heart
Love yet hath thrown his wing;
I rather think she's like myself,
An April-hearted thing;
I only know that she is fair,
And loves me passing well;
But who the gentle maiden is,
I feel not free to tell.

MILITARY RIVALS.

We were travelling awhile since on one of the Sound boats, where we met on deck just after breakfast our old acquaintance, John Bustow—Col. John Bustow, who has bought and sold more horses than any other live man, it is said, in the United States. While we were exchanging the usual salutations of the morning, the sharp tones of the hand-bell were heard ringing along the deck, and the almost as sharp voice of the Steward was heard crying, "All dem passengis as hab not settle deir passige um please step to de captin's offis, an' settle."

There were many passengers, and of course, as usual, a great crowd of persons were gathered around the "Capin's offis," each quietly awaiting his turn to pay.—Suddenly a tall robust young man, elbowed his way roughly through the mass of people up to the window, and stretching out his money to the clerk said in a loud tone:

"Take my fare, Sir!"

"What name, Sir?" said the clerk as he received the bills.

"Captain Victor Henry Digamma and lady, of the *You*nited States' Awmy, sir!" was the reply, in a very pompous and conceited voice.

This was rather too much for our acquaintance, the horse dealer. He passed rudely through the crowd and loudly addressed the clerk, while the captain of the awmy yet stood by, and the people seemed to be thinking whether to lynch him or not.

"Take my fare, Sir!"

"What name?" said the clerk meekly.

"Korp'ril John Bustow, Sir—Korp'ril Bustow and horse, sir, of the Connecticut Milishy, sir!" was his answer, delivered in a most comically pompous tone.

How blank that army captain looked, and what a good natured crowd that was immediately after this answer, only those can understand whose imagination can picture the reality!—The Elephant.

PROFESSIONAL PROMPTITUDE.

A celebrated Dublin surgeon was once known to give a lesson of economy to a wealthy and fashionable young man, remarkably fond of his handsome face and person. He was sent for, and found the person seated at a table, resting his cheek upon his hand, whilst before him was a five pound note. After some little hesitation, he removed his hand, and displayed a small mole on his cheek.

"I wish to have it removed."

"Does it inconvenience you?"

"Not in the least."

"Then why wish for its extirpation?"

"I do not like the look of it."

"Sir," replied the surgeon, "I am not in the habit of being disturbed for such trifles; moreover, I think that little excrescence had better remain untouched, since it gives you no uneasiness; and I make it a rule only to take from patients what is troublesome to them."

So saying, he took the five pound note slipped it into his pocket, and walked out of the room, leaving his patient in a state of perfect astonishment.

It is related of a physician who received his daily fee from a rich old miser, who had it clenched in his fist when he arrived and turned his head away when he opened his hand for the doctor to take it, that on being informed his patient had died in the morning, not in the least disconcerted, he walked up to the dead man's chamber, and found his clenched fist stretched out as usual; presuming that it still grasped the accustomed remuneration, with some difficulty he opened the fingers, took out the guinea, and departed.

QUITE AN ADVENTURE.

A party of three young men from Washington city, having visited Baltimore, probably to "see the elephant," and other curiosities about town, after getting steam up pretty considerably, visited the Museum, where they had been told not only the elephant, but the bones of the mastadon, and a variety of other curiosities, were to be seen. The inquisitive trio, after viewing the works of art and nature below, ascended to the saloon and took a private box, in order to see, undisturbed, the performances there. Being thus brought to a dead halt, the action of the steam began gradually to lose its effect, and one of the party soon found himself wrapped in profound slumber, while his comrades were so much engaged in the play that they forgot him. The performances having been concluded, the parties awake went off, and left their somnolent friend in the box asleep. The gas lights were soon extinguished, and the manager unobservingly locked him up, not only in the private box, but in the Museum. Time passed until horrid dreams, perhaps, that the elephant had turned ferocious, woke the lonely sleeper. For some time he could not realize his situation. Finally, consciousness, reason and recollection began to resume their powers, and the pent-up stranger sought to extricate himself from the dilemma. The dim moonlight attracted him to a small window. This he raised, and by jumping some distance, alighted on the roof of an adjoining building, the Farmer's and Merchants' Bank. Here was another dilemma—how was he to escape from this? The extreme coldness of the night—and the fact that necessity is the mother of invention—put his wits again to work. The thought struck him that he would make his way into the attic window of the building, the roof of which he was the sole occupant, and descend thence at the mercy of those within. He put his new idea into execution, and in passing through the window, aroused a young man who was asleep in the room. Alarmed somewhat at the unceremonious and unusual entree of so strange a visiter, he gave the alarm and took him captive, under the belief that he had some evil designs upon the vaults of the moneyed institution below. Finally, after bringing his prisoner to the light, viewed his countenance, and hearing his rather adventurous but apparently plusible story he conducted him down stairs. This was not enough—grateful for past favors, and desirous of establishing his character more fully and satisfactorily than by mere ipse dixit, he insisted that the young man whose repose he had so ab uptly disturbed should accompany him out, and he would find further evidence from the companions who had accompanied him to the Museum—The young gentleman did so. The recreant companions were found—the story of the somnambulist fully corroborated, and the anxieties of all parties relieved. Such are the adventures of a Washingtonian "seeing the elephant" in Baltimore.—Patriot.

A Funeral.—An old colored man, a short time since, was passing along one of our streets, carrying under his arm a coffin of the smallest imaginable dimensions, to contain the body of a human being, and was on his way with it to a burying ground for interment. He had on a large cloak, which he pulled over it to hide it from view. A party of rowdies met him, little thinking that he carried the dead, when one of them wantonly struck him on the top of his hat, knocking it over his eyes. Pulling the hat off as quick as possible, he turned round to the party, at the same time throwing his cloak back and partly exhibiting the coffin, remarked—"Don't do dat, gemmen, 'case you see I's a funeral." The manner of the old man, together with so sudden a revelation, took the party all aback—they halted, and let the funeral pass on.—Balt. Clipper.

A CASE OF CONSCIENCE.

In certain "Ladies' Moral Reform Society," existing not many miles from the banks of the Kennebec, the members were obliged, the Bath Tribune says, to sign a pledge not to "set up," as it is termed, nor to do anything else that might be supposed to have a tendency, however remote, to immortality. One evening as the president was calling over the names, to know whether each member had kept the obligation, a beautiful and highly respectable young lady burst into tears, and on being questioned as to the cause, said she feared she had broken the pledge, "Why, what have you done?" asked the President.—"Oh," sobbed the young lady, "Dr.——kissed me the other night, when he waited on me home from meeting." "O well, that is nothing very bad," said the President; "his kissing you does not make it that you have broken the pledge." "O, but that isn't the worst of it," exclaimed the conscientious young lady, "I kissed him back again."

PRETTY MEAN.

The Boston Bee says:—We hear of an awful mean man down east—stay in Portland—who every night gives each of his little children a cent to go to bed without supper. But the meanest part of the transaction is, that he sits up himself until after the children have fallen to sleep, when he goes to their bed, steals the pennies from them, and then buys them off again the next night with the same coin. It is also said that he has followed the practice so long and the pennies are getting so thin, that the children question their value.

DR. THOMPSON'S
MEDICATED SYRUP OF CASTOR OIL.

THE Subscriber would most respectfully inform the Citizens of Cambridge and the Public generally, that he has succeeded in making Castor Oil perfectly agreeable and while it is rendered agreeable to the taste the Cathartic properties are very little if any diminished; and by the medication all that acrid quality of which oil is generally possessed which rendered it inadmissable with some persons especially with infants, is entirely destroyed.

It is well known that Castor Oil is almost an universal medicine—entering into the use of every family, and administered in the treatment of almost every disease—and would be much more frequently prescribed by physicians, was it not for the great aversion to its use. But in this preparation, the subscriber can assure physicians and patients, they will find it so perfectly agreeable to the taste, that infants and ladies of the most delicate stomachs can take it without the least inconvenience. Indeed it is so perfectly palitable that should it be found necessary to take a little more in a dose it will not be found objectionable to the patient.

The Medicated Syrup of Castor Oil may be had at the store of E. M. DAWSON & BROTHER in Easton. Wholesale and Retail orders from a distance promptly attended to.

Dyspepsia Cured.

MARTIN & WHITELEY'S NATIONAL TONIC is the best remedy ever offered to the public in all cases of Dyspepsia and Ague and Fever. A healthy condition and a natural action of the functions of the Stomach and Liver are necessary to healthy Digestion. The Stomach has been called the centre of Sympathies. It may therefore be truly said there is no disorder of the human body, which does not, more or less, affect the functions of the Stomach. "Indigestion is rarely, if ever the sole cause of organic disease of the Stomach." It is however a very fruitful source of it in other parts of the system. It is, then, evident whatever will restore the tone or healthy action of the Stomach, when impaired by disease, is the only proper Medicine as a curative. Such, we feel assured is the national Tonic.

We give below a certificate of a highly respectable gentleman, a merchant in Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, who last summer came to consult a distinguished Physician in this City. He had also sought the aid of several, who rank high in their profession in Philadelphia, and in the State of Pennsylvania. But hearing of this Tonic, determined to use it as directed, and the result has been, as he says a perfect cure.

Church Town, Cumberland Co., Pa., Nov 3d 1847.

Messrs. Martin & Whiteley,

Gentlemen—I have used your preparation called Fever and Ague Tonic, for the cure of Dyspepsia, and am happy to inform you that it has cured me of the most obstinate and inveterate case of Dyspepsia. I therefore recommend it to all similarly afflicted.

Yours, CARY W. AHL.

N B.—I consider myself perfectly cured of Dyspepsia.

Price $1 per bottle. Around each bottle there is a short treatise on those diseases.—Prepared and sold by Martin and Whiteley at their wholesale Drug Store, 320 Baltimore street.
