THE FORTIETH WEDDING DAY. Again thon'rt come, and I am here, With fuded eve and locks of gray; s How changed the somes of life appear, On this, my fortieth wedding-day.

Was this the morn whose early hours Woke fluttering with a troubled joy; When all my footsteps were on flowers, And hope alone my heart's employ! And where are they, the young and fair,

Who graced that day with opening bloom ask, and "echo answers where," Dear inmates of the silent tomb. see them now, the welcome throng.

That pressed around my bridal home; The tale, the laugh, the merry song, Like shadows o'er my senses come. see them round my toilette press, And fold the plait and smooth the bair,

And give the soothing, fond caress, And kiss the brow they said was fair. I hear the solemn promise given, I kel the small ring's circle now. The closing prayer ascends to Heaven, And angel pens record the vow.

Tis gone-'tis gone-the fading dream ! My hair is blanched, my eves are dim; I'm floating on life's closing stream, But, (praised be God,) it leads to llim.
