pidly in pursuit. The party continued their course for a distance of 4½ miles from Ferry, until they reached the farm and house bought and occupied by Brown, under the name of John Smith. The dwelling, a log house, containing two unpaved basement rooms, used apparently for storage, and in which were several empty gun boxes; two rooms and a pantry upon the second floor; and one large attic room in which were about six husk mattresses—was discovered to be unoccupied, save by a huge, savage looking mastiff, tied with a rope to the railing of a small piazza outside the house, but there were abundant evidences of its recent hurried vacation.

But the most valuable discovery was a trunk belonging to Capt. Brown, containing a great number of highly important papers, documents, plans, and letters from private individuals throughout the Union—all revealing the existence of an extensive and thoroughly organized conspiracy, whose leaders were Captain Brown and J. T. Cook, and the well-defined, determinedly expressed object of which, was the hastening of the 'irrepressible conflict' predicted by Senator Seward, and recently by Gerrit Smith, which was to result in the 'disenthralment of the slaves of the South,' and the extinction of the 'Slave Power.'

The most undoubted evidences have thus been obtained, not only of the plans and hopes of this formidable insurrectionary organization, but of the indisputable fact of its extension throughout the Northern and Western States, from the influential citizens of whom the treasonable movement has received its sustaining support and encouragement.

Among the most important documents discovered were pamphlets containing the Constitution of a Provisional Government for the United States, the treasonable purposes and objects of which, if not directly set forth, are nevertheless so clearly expressed as to be conclusive. It occupies some three columns in the Clipper, and is of course too lengthy for our columns so late in the week.

There were between 3,000 and 4,000 of these pamphlets carefully done up in small bundles, apparently for convenient distribution.

STARTLING REVELATION—THE POINTS OF ATTACK.

In a trunk, supposed to have belonged to Capt. Brown, was found seven small though elaborate maps of as many different States, bearing peculiar marks, which would seem to indicate that the points of attack, and the course of the insurrectionary movement through the South, had already been carefully determined upon by this well-organized and confident league of traitors. Certain counties in the seven States, of which only these maps were obtained, bear crossmarks formed by a pen and in several instances as if to command greater particularity of attention, or to suggest perhaps more available points of attack, circular lines are drawn around the crosses.

The designated counties in the States of South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi, form a continuous chain of districts or route of travel from Georgetown; and from Beaufort, South Carolina, along the Savannah river, to the Chattahoochie river on the western border of Georgia; from thence passing through convenient points on the Alabama and Tombigby rivers to the borders of Mississippi; from whence it continues with little interruption to the Red river. The maps which are about 18 by 12 inches, are carefully and neatly pasted on stout cambric cloth. Upon the margin of each map is pasted the census returns of 1850, of its State; giving in detail the relative strength of the white and slave population of each county, and the proportion of females to the whole number of inhabitants. By referring to the counties marked, it will be perceived that in them the slave population vastly preponderates, and might, therefore, have been deemed a safer field of operation for the abolition invaders.

IMPORTANT LETTERS AND NOTES.

In the same trunk in which the maps were discovered, were found a number of highly important letters from certain well known Northern abolitionists, conveying both "aid and comfort" to the insurrectionists; among them was a letter from Gerrit Smith, of New York, containing some financial statements, and a cheque for $100, endorsed by the cashier of a New York bank, and a letter from Frederick Douglas, enclosing $10, a part contribution by a lady. These were read by Governor Wise to the crowd in the arsenal yard.

OLD BROWN'S JOURNAL.

"Old" Brown kept a daily journal, in which he set forth the details of his transactions; which show his purchase of arms in large quantities and ammunition and stores of all kinds necessary to the success of an extensive insurrection—field spyglasses, picks and shovels for throwing up temporary fortifications, calls, or boatswain's whistles of a new kind, being very shrill and capable of being heard at a long distance, (which are supposed to have been intended for assembling his bands or warning them of danger) were among the stores in wagon captured by the Greys. The whistles, as per bill found in his effects, were made in Philadelphia, and forwarded to an agent of his in Baltimore, last week, per Adams & Co's Express—some of them were found in his valise.

There is nothing in the papers found showing that negroes or others belonging at Harper's Ferry or its vicinity were participes criminis before the fact in Brown's conspiracy.

SHOOTING WITH THE LONGBOW.—We need not inform our readers that the romantic story in the Star about the decease of a Mr. Showell in Worcester and his "last dying confession" is made out of the whole cloth. Munchausen must look to his laurels. The only oasis of fact in that desert of fiction is that a person of that name recently deceased in Worcester; the rest is pure fiction. The author must be the same individual who when applied to to know if a certain man did not make thirty tons of butter in one year replied, "Well I won't be certain about the exact amount of butter but this I do know for a fact, he kept two seats mills running all the year with the whey."
