FARMER'S COLUMN.

From the New England Farmer.

A FARMER'S SONG.

We envy not the princely man,
In city or in town,
Who wonders whether pumpkin vines
Run up the hill or down:
We care not for his marble halls,
Nor yet his heaps of gold,
We would not own his sordid heart
For all his wealth thrice told.

We are the favored ones of earth,
We breathe pure air each morn,
We sow—we reap the golden grain—
We gather in the corn;
We toil—we live on what we earn,
And more than this we do,
We bear of starving millions round,
And gladly feed them, too.

The lawyer lives on princely fees,
Yet drags a weary life;
He never knows a peaceful hour—
His atmosphere is strife.
The merchant thumbs his yard-stick o'er—
Grows haggered at his toil;
He's not the man God meant him for—
Why don't be till the soil?

The doctor plods through storm and cold,
Plods at his patient's will;
When dead and gone he plods again
To get his lengthy bill.
The printer, (bless his noble soul,)
He grasps the mighty earth,
And stamps it on our welcome sheet,
To cheer the farmer's hearth

We sing the honor of the plow,
And honor of the press—
Two noble instruments of toil,
With each a power to bless,
The bone and nerve of this fast age,
True wealth of human kind—
One tills the ever generous earth,
The other tills the mind.

BEDDING FOR CATTLE.

The importance of this is conceded for the horse, and most humane owners provide straw or refuse hay to put the nag at his ease when he lies down in the stable. It is quite as important for all the ruminant animals that we have domesticated. Instinct prompts them to seek the dryest, warmest spot in the pasture for their repose, and nature spreads for them the soft green turf, quite as much for their rest, as for their sustenance. The wise farmer will profit by nature's hint, and when he stables his cattle for the winter, will provide dry warm beds.

Bedding favors the accumulation of fat and muscle, by helping to retain the animal heat, and prompting quiet and comfort. It also promotes the secretion of milk in cows, for the same reasons. Any one can satisfy himself on this point, by experimenting with a cow a week in a well bedded stable, and a second week upon the bare ground in the barn yard. Cows in milk are kept much cleener with a good bed, and this is an item of prime importance, with all who love clean milk. Quite a variety of substances are used for bedding. Straw and hay are the most common, as they are the most convenient, especially to farmers who raise grain largely, or who have a good deal of swamp land, yielding poor hay.

In cities and villages, they are often too costly, and this has led to various substitutes, some of them quite as good as straw, and having this advantage, that they add very much to the manure heap. Dry sawdust, from saw and shingle mills, and the fine chips and shavings from planing mills, all make good bedding. Spent tan bark, when dried in the sun, also serves the same purpose, and makes a much more valuable manure. Eel-grass is also much used for this purpose, by the sea-shore farmers, and answers well. Leaves from the forest, especially those of hard wood trees, make a still better bed, and form one of the best composts for the garden or field.

Dried turf from a salt marsh is, on the whole, the best bedding we have ever used in our stable. It is cut in summer, in blocks of about a cubic foot each, dried in the sun a few weeks, and then stored under cover for use. It is very light, spongy, and absorbs urine better than anything we have ever tried. A layer of it under a horse will last about two weeks before it is saturated. It is then thrown into the barn cellar to undergo fermentation.

One great advantage of this, and of the saw-dust and tan bark is, that they put the animal heat of the stock to an economic use. It promotes the decomposition of the vegetable matter, and swells the manure heap very rapidly.

Any one, or all of these materials are exceedingly valuable in the stable, and the stock owner should use them as largely as possible, for the purpose of increasing his stock of fertilizers.—Amer. Agriculturist.

SHEEP vs. OTHER STOCK.

The Kentucky Farmer thus briefly enumerates some of the advantages of keeping sheep:

They make the quickest return for the investment in them, being ready to eat at three or four months old, and yielding a valuable fleece at one year old, perhaps a lamb also.

Their sustenance is cheaper than that of any other animals—grass and stock fodder being all they will require at any season.

They supply the family at all seasons, with the most wholesome and delicious meat, of the most convenient size for family use.

They present valuable products in two forms, their wool and their flesh, both of which are adapted to home consumption, and to sale, and both of which are adapted to either domestic or distant markets.

The transportation of them to market alive is cheaper than of any other live stock (not blooded) of the same value, and the same it is true also, of their wool, compared with other and similar agricultural products.

Wool may be more easily and safely kept in expectation of a better market than any other and similar products, as it is less liable to fire, insects, rats, or rotting.

An investment in them is self-enlarging, and rapidly so, by their annual increase, while their wool pays much in the way of interest at the same time which is not true of many if of any similar investments.

CAMPBELL'S PURE ESSENCE OF JAMAICA GINGER—Ginger is a grateful stimulant and carminitive, and is often given in Gout, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Cramp, Cholera Morbus, Cholic, Cholera, &c., &c.

In Nervous and Sick Headache, Sea Sickness, Nausea, Imperfect Digestion, or from Nausea induced by riding in a carriage, &c., it will be found most agreeable to the stomach and palatable to the taste, and affording at the same time almost in all cases immediate relief.

To the Inebriate it is particularly serviceable: a very small quantity used instead of the usual stimulant, will give tone and vigor to the digestive organs, and impart strength to resist the temptation, and may therefore be considered a valuable agent in reclaiming the drunkard.

The traveling public will also find it very efficacious in correcting the bad results arising from a change of water and diet, a few drops of which will give a glow and vigor to the stomach, equal to a wine glass of brandy or other stimulant, without producing any of the injurious and overrating effects which are sure to result from the use of stimuli of any kind. It is also a superior article for Flavoring Jellies, Preserves, Cakes, and for other Culinary uses, besides making a good beverage in hot weather.

DOSE.—An adult may take one spoonful; a child from 8 to 11 years old, half that quanity; and for a child 2 to 5 years old, 10 to 20 drops To be given in syrup or in sugar and water. Prepared and for sale by LEVIN H. CAMPBELL,
