Mechanical Milking.

Some miles below the city of Philadelphia there is a farm of 300 acres, owned by Mr. B. D. Kershow, the whole of which is used for dairy purposes, upward of 120 cows being kept in buildings that may be called models of their kind. The whole product of this dairy, in the form of milk and cream, is consumed by one of our hotels. To take care of and keep in good milking condition so large a number of cows, requires a high degree of attention and skill. But to have them properly and thoroughly milked is a far greater undertaking—a very large amount of work having to be done, twice a day, within a limited period of time. Now this trouble is in a fair way of being overcome by machinery. On Thursday last, Mr. Biddle, President of the Philadelphia Agricultural Society, accompanied by several members of that body, went down to Mr. Kershow's farm to see the cows operated on by a machine for milking them, recently patented by Mr. L. O. Colvin. It was really a curious but highly satisfactory exhibition; and, if longer trial should verify the experience of last week, the contrivance will prove to be one of the greatest labor-saving machines, in its way, ever invented.

Several cows were milked out clean, with entire satisfaction to all who saw the thing done, as well as to the cows themselves, who stood as if they rather liked it. Twelve quarts are drawn in two minutes, so that the whole herd can, by additional appliances, be milked in half an hour. The machine is so simple an affair that a child may work it. It consists of two distinct, single-acting pumps, made in the form of tin basins, placed with their bottoms a little distance apart. Each pump has a rubber head drawn over the end of the basin and turned in, and to each pump are attached two metallic tea-cups by elastic joints, so as to fit the distance apart of teats in different cows. In the bottom of each pump is a single valve, which closes when the suction is produced and opens to discharge the milk into the pail, when the vacuum ceases. As the rubber heads are drawn out by the levers, a vacuum is produced which causes the milk to flow into the pump; when they return to their positions again, the milk passes out through the valves, and all pressure on the teats ceases; thus producing a remitting suction, in imitation of the natural suction of the calf. If the inventor would now turn his attention to the getting up of a machine that would enable Mr. Kershow's hens to lay two eggs a day, he would add still further to his claim to being considered a public benefactor, beside realizing a snug fortune from the farmers, who, just as certainly as the hens, would be compelled to shell out.

Popular Fallacies Exposed.

"A woman gadding abroad, is one of the most disagreeable sights in the world; her place is at home!"

We are not sure of that, either; not if she wears a pretty bonnet, and has cheeks like the sunny side of a peach, and ripe, cherry kind of lips.

We've seen a great many more disagreeable things, and confess a weakness for bright eyes and pretty hair. Undoubtedly her place is home, but that's no reason she should shut herself up there, until she looks like a cherry stalk or a lump of chalk. Who would buy the coal and calico, the marketing and the new music, if a woman is never to set her foot over the threshold? The man that wrote that heresy never kept house, we know.

"*W*omen should always be calm and composed, like a peaceful landscape or a serenely shining star. Her whole manner should carry the idea of rest and repose."

All very well if the gentleman in possession of these "serenely-shining eyes" would allow them to remain up among the clouds, high above all sublunary toils and turmoils. But what is the luminary to do when husband brings home a friend to dinner on Monday, when the "wash" is in high procedure—when an extra chicken has to be broiled, and the best table cloth whisked on at three minutes and a quarter's notice?—Has our critic a right to complain if his wife makes her appearance with face redder than the pickled beets, and manners decidedly flurried?

"A woman should never, under any circumstances lose her temper."

Might as well tell the wind not to blow on a March day, or the rain not to come down in April. It does them good to "explode" occasionally. A woman, to be good for anything must have as much spice and sparkle in her as a bottle of champaigne, and if the cork comes out once in a while, with a bang, why that don't depreciate the value of the goods.

But let the men preach; it don't amount to anything, after all. We hold them captive by every one of their dickey strings and coat buttons—by the rents in their stockings, and toothaches and headaches they want to be nursed through. They can't do without us, and all this good advice and assumed air of bravado is only a natural chafing under the invisible chains.—On the whole we think it rather foolish to take notice of it all. Talk away, gentlemen; you won't hurt our feelings.
