SOUTHERN ITEMS.—A few items of interest are furnished by the Richmond papers of Friday last:

—— The Dispatch announces the appointment of David H. Todd, brother-in-law to President Lincoln, to a Lieutenancy in the Confederate Army. He is stationed in North Carolina.

—— On Tuesday last, a meeting of Superintendents of the different Railroads in Virginia, was held at Richmond. Nine roads were represented, and a new time-table for the running of passenger trains between Richmond and the Manassas Junction was agreed upon. A resolution was adopted requiring the different Companies to erect lines of telegraph along their respective roads.

—— Governor Letcher has issued a proclamation, prohibiting, on account of the blockade, the exportation of provisions of any description.

—— The brother of Jackson is announced to be near Alexandria, with his wife, picking off from two or five Northern soldiers daily. Gov. Letcher has sent for the family of Jackson, who will hereafter be provided for by the State; and a monument will be erected to the memory of the "first martyr," as he is called.

—— Recruits for the Confederate army are becoming scarce, and two dollars is now offered for each one brought to the recruiting officers.

—— Two hundred thousand dollars' worth of beef were purchased a few days since, at Louisville, for the Confederate Army.

—— In many of the counties of Virginia, not single man dared to vote against the Ordinance of Secession.

—— There are three South Carolina Regiments at the Manassas Junction.

—— Mr. Crenshaw has tendered to Jeff. Davis the gratuitous use of his house, furniture, and negroes, for a term of three months, or longer if desired, for the "Presidential Mansion."

—— The Dispatch of the 31st reports that it has received information that a son of the law partner of the President of the London and Hampshire Railway had been arrested by the South Carolina Volunteers, and hung as a spy. Upon his person, concealed in his coat collar, when arrested, were a map of Harper's Ferry, and a manuscript embodying the writer's ideas in regard to the effective force and dispositions of troops at the Ferry, and the best mode for the Federal forces to pursue to ensure success.

—— Howell Cobb recommends that the Southern planters of rice, cotton and wheat shall give their crops to the Southern Confederacy, taking in payment thereof their bonds. The Confederacy will then send their crops to Europe and receive payment in cash. He does not say, however, how he intends to evade the blockade.

—— T. J. McKaig and Coleman Yeilott, the Commissioners from Maryland, had arrived at Richmond.

—— The fortifications in and around Richmond are progressing rapidly, but great difficulty is experienced in procuring a sufficient force. Five hundred negroes are called to assist.

—— Twelve companies have been raised in Albemarle county. Six of them are at Manassas Junction and the others are without arms.

—— Five counties in Virginia have given $118,000 in aid of the war.

—— A percussion cap factory in Richmond is turning out thirty thousand caps a day.

—— A military school is to open at the University of Virginia.

The Future.

The "North British Review," a periodical representing the best scholarship of the Scottish Kirk, in its current number for the month of May, contains an elaborate article on "The American Secession." Though partaking of the errors natural to foreign writers in dealing with questions of fact and theory in the matter of our politics and civil system, it is marked by a general spirit of candor and of good feeling towards the "great Republic' which Mr. Jefferson, at the date of his first inauguration as President, deemed to be "in the full tide of successful experiment."

It that "experiment" is now subjected to a new ordeal, there is yet abundant reason to hope that the days of the nation are far from being numbered. Amid the portents of war, with its disturbing influences preoccupying the mind, there is on the part of many a disposition to hate somewhat of heart and hope, with regard to the future, under the pressure of a despondency inspired by present troubles.

The thoughtful student of history, equally with the hopeful patriot, will be little likely to give place to any such misgivings with regard to the ultimate destiny of the Republic, and so true are the deductions capable of being drawn from the historic laws which govern the growth and development of States that the North British Essayist, in the following remarks, gives expression to this general truth, with its particular application to our land:

"We cannot believe it possible that a people so astute and sagacious as the Americans can pass through the vicissitudes which are before them without learning their deep meaning and practical lessons. We have strong faith in the recuperative powers of the people, and that, out of the soil of political corruption and jugglery, a race of purer, nobler men will rise, under whose sound statesmanship a reconstructed Union of States will resolutely cleanse herself from her faults, and advance, by a stable progress, to a far nobler, mightier position than she lost in 1861.—It cannot be that the latest born of mighty Protestant nations, the most enlightened, the richest in the heritage of all priceless things which sages and patriots have bequeathed to the world, shall fail to fulfill her destiny.

"To believe in her national suicide would be to believe, also, that men live only for themselves, to satisfy their own cupidity, to revenge their own wrongs and gratify their own ambition, rather than for their fellow men and for posterity. There are moments of phrenzied discontent, but there is also a sober after-thought; and we cannot suppose that, under its influence; the Americans of this generation will disinherit their children of the liberty and glory held only in trust for them, and deprive the world of some of the brightest hopes it has cherished since our race began its slow and painful but wisely appointed progress.

"There surely cannot be a permanent retrogression and decay in a nation planted in the noblest principles of right and liberty, and combining, in marvellously adjusted proportions, the vigorous and energetic elements of the world's master races, in the midst of which the tone is given and the march is led by that one of them which has never faltered in its onward course, and which is possessed of such tenacity and versatility that it is everywhere successful. The present calamity and confusion probably from the crucible fires in which the Union is to be "purified, made white and tried," in order that she may take her destined place in the van of the world's progress in christianity and civilization, fullfilling, in the resistless march of her dominant Anglo-Saxon race across the American continent, one grand part of the divine scheme for the spread of that Gospel which shall survive all changes, overthrow all evils, and achieve its mightiest triumphs in the later days of our world's history."
