WHERE CONVICTS GAMBLE.

In a Western Prison They Are Allowed to Play for Stakes on Sundays.

A few weeks ago, while sojourning in Carson City, the capital of Nevada, I witnessed a scene that struck me as exceedingly curious, and which probably was never duplicated anywhere in this country," said T. B. Gardiner, of Chicago, states the Washington Post.

"A friend of mine who was on good terms with the warden of the state penitentiary took me to that institution on a Sunday afternoon, and there I saw all the convicts, numbering several hundred, assembled in the long dining-room of the structure, playing poker, seven-up, monte, faro and nearly all the gambling games known to western sports. Don't think for a moment that these men were merely playing for fun; they were betting chips which stood for sure-enough money and the play was just as serious and as much on the level as though it were taking place in a regular gambling establishment.

"This gambling, my friend told me, was never allowed on any other day but Sunday, the idea being that as the state laws licensed it there was no valid objection to the inmates of the prison engaging therein. Every convict was issued checks showing how much cash there was to his credit, and if he chose to lose these checks representing his money at cards it was his own affair. While the men played, which they did with all the fervor of free gamesters, a couple of guards sat watching them with loaded Winchesters in their laps, ready to put down the slightest outbreak or least indication of disorder with a form of argument that scarcely ever fails to persuade."

MIRRORS COVERED WALLS.

Means Adopted by Man of Money to Teach Gracefulness in His Family.

A rich man has the walls of his house covered with mirrors instead of pictures. In every room he can see himself in profile, from the rear, from the left, from the right—in twenty different ways. He claims, relates the Chicago Chronicle, that these mirrors promote grace. He asserts he has these mirrors on his children's account.

Mirrors, according to this man's view, do not promote vanity. They promote self-study and in consequence, self-improvement.

If a young girl is round-shouldered she is hardly aware of her defect in the ordinary course of life, but if she lived in a house lined with mirrors she would see all the time the ugly, slovenly curve of her back, and, mortified and grieved, she would at once set to work with suitable exercises to become straight.

All sorts of ugly habits—ugly ways of sitting, of standing, of smiling, of gesturing—are pictured in a true and unflattering way by mirrors. The average man or woman, perceiving these uglinesses, would set to work to remove them. The trouble is, according to the rich man, that the average person does not perceive his several uglinesses and no one is frank enough to point them out to him."

This innovator, opposing hotly the contention that mirrors foster vanity, looks at himself at home nearly all the time, and continually he urges his children to look at themselves and to strive daily to improve in grace.

AN OLD-TIME FRENCH FORT

Canadian Landmark Which Passed Into the Hands of the English.

The interior of Fort Chambly is only a mass of ruins. Fortunately, writes Mary Catherine Crowley, in Four-Track News, the hand of the restorer has but drawn a protecting line around them and thus the lichen-covered remains of the powder house, the kitchen, the chapel, have lost their picturesqueness. The parade ground is now overgrown with long grass and wild flowers, and the birds nest in the crannies of the chapel walls, the kitchen, and even in the powder house. It is pleasant to listen to the twittering of the swallows that still linger about the place, and to look down upon the swift current of the Richlieu, which here swirls and leaps over the rocks in mad, foaming rapids.

By the treaty of Paris, in 1763, Fort Chambly passed, with all the other French possessions in Canada, into the hands of the English. In 1775 it was taken by the troops of congress, led by Gen. Montgomery, on his way to Montreal, and the following year was burned by the Americans when they retreated to the shores of Lake Champlain.

Too Much Money.

Years ago Mr. Gladstone was one of the guests at a dinner in England where the oldest member of the Vanderbilt family was also present. Somebody whispered to the English premier that the rich American had $100,000,000, and Mr. Gladstone commented, after looking curiously at Mr. Vanderbilt: "Then I should say that he constitutes a peril to the American republic."

Bankruptcy Romance.

Having received a legacy of £1,500 a Dover florist has announced to his creditors, under a nine-year-old bankruptcy, that they will now be paid in full, with four per cent. interest to date. Only 1s. 11d. in the pound was paid under the bankruptcy. The payments will practically swallow up the legacy.

LITMUS PAPER SHOWS SOIL

Agriculturist Tells How Acidity of Land May Be Determined —Shows Proof.

The state experiment stations are doing a great work for the farmers, declares Country Life in America. The following incident shows how simple some of the tests are "when you know how." A station official was going over a farm with the owner when they came to a crawfishy piece of land just back of the barn. The very weeds looked yellow and unhealthful. "I am inclined to think," remarked the agriculturist, "that this land is too acid for productivity. We can determine this in a moment." Taking a blue piece of paper from his pocket, he stooped and dipped the paper into some of the soil water that was standing in a cow track. To the owner's astonishment, the blue paper changed to a red color as soon as it was immersed. "There," said the agriculturist, 'we have our proof. This is just a piece of litmus paper. For five cents, you can buy a similar piece at any drug store. Its change of color shows that the land is sour. Crops cannot thrive on sour land any more than children can thrive on sour milk."

The attention of horsemen and farmers in general is called to the advertisement in this issue of Dr. I. A. Barber's superior horse, Sweet Andy. 4t

IF THE SUN WERE COLORED

Amazing Possibilities If the Orb of Day Gave Forth Tinted Rays.

A German astronomer has recently published some interesting observations on the theoretical effects of a change in the color of the sun. It is amazing to consider the possibilities if our sun were green, blue or red, instead of what it is, says the New York Herald. If it were blue there would be only two colors in the world—blue and black. If it were red, then everything would be red or black. If it were yellow, everything would be yellow or black. Every one knows that the light of our sun consists of six colors, and the reason things are different hues is that some swallow up five of the colors and reflect only one. Thus we have primroses yellow, because they absorb all but the yellow; roses red, because they absorb all but the red; violets purple, because they absorb everything but red and blue, a mixture of which two colors forms purple.

In the event of the sun being red, roses, blood, red ink and all other things that are now red would reflect it. So would snow, the lily and all things that are now white, but these would, of course, be red. Everything else would swallow up the red light and appear quite black. Grass, for instance, would be black as ink and so would the blue of the sky, but the white clouds would be red. The same kind of thing would happen if the sun were blue. Everything now blue or white would be blue and everything else black. The whole sky, clouds and all, would be blue. The grass this time would be blue, not black, for it reflects both blue and yellow. Hair would be all black, the red of the lips would be black and the rest of the face would be a cloudy blue.

If the sun were green we would have a little variety. Things that are now yellow would still be yellow. Things that are blue would be blue and things that are green would still be green, but there would be no reds, purples, orange, pinks or any of those cheery hues that make the world look so bright.

THE CZAR'S LITTLE GIRLS.

From This Account It Will Be Seen That They Are Real Children.

The little Russian princesses do not quite bear out the prevailing impression that all the children of monarchs are necessarily paragons of perfection or little prudes. These small girls are children, warm hearted, mischievous, high spirited, free of speech, unfettered of action, and possessed of a full appreciation of their own exalted rank, says the Chicago Tribune. Fair haired, blue eyed Grand Duchess Olga has often been known to stop her little pony carriage in the parks of Peterhoff, to call to order some passer-by who had failed to accord her the attention she considered due to an emperor's daughter.

One day last summer, when the court was still at Peterhoff, the four little duchesses were playing on the beach in front of the Alexandrine palace, when they saw a young officer who was engrossed in supervising a group of sailors executing a difficult piece of work. The men on perceiving the children's approach, suspended their labor, and, standing at attention, rendered them the full military honors that were their due. This amused the little girls to such an extent that they instantly abandoned their games to strut demurely up and down in front of the workers, who were thus compelled to neglect their labor and salute each time they passed.

This went on for some time, until the officer began to lose patience. Observing that the little girls meant to continue the game indefinitely he quietly ordered the men to go on with their work and take no further notice of them.

To the Grand Duchess Olga's amazement then, no one moved to acknowledge her presence a moment later when she came tripping along the path. She gazed first at the officer, then at the sailors, as if at a loss whom to hold responsible for this gross act of contempt to her imperial person. Then, stamping her small foot, she cried: "Salute at once, or I'll tell papa!"

Jews in China.

There is said to be a Chinese-Jewish colony in the Yang-tse-Kiang valley in China. This colony has existed since 200 years before the Christian era. Its people have a synagogue in which they attend worship, extract the sinews from flesh before eating it, erect tablets to Moses and Abraham, and are called by some "blue-capped Mohammedans," because of their blue headdress. Otherwise they are little different from other Chinese citizens, hold high offices in the land at times, and because of Chinese tolerant principles have never been persecuted or oppressed.

Pearl Fishing in Finland.

In Russian Finland fishing for pearls is one of the most profitable of the native industries. It is very slow, laborious work. The fisher sits, or rather lies, on a curious raft, made of brush, known as a "mile an hour" raft. From this position he slowly dredges the bottom for the shells which contain the precious pearls. The pole he uses is a very crude affair, and is much less effective than the rakes used in American waters.
