MISS GILBERT'S "MISTAKE."

An Entertaining Little Romance by O. Norman Eddy.

I was awaiting an answer to a card which I had sent up to my friends, the Gilberts, when the waiter who had taken it returned and invited me to follow him. On reaching the suit of apartments to which he led me there stood a young girl, with a card in her hand, whom I had never seen. My first impulse was to withdraw, but when she advanced to greet me there was that in her presence, especially in the smile with which she welcomed me, that bade me pause for developments.

"I expected you," she said. "Uncle wrote me that you would be here today, though I hardly thought you would come so early. Yes, I know what you're going to say—couldn't wait and all that. Such nice things don't count between us, since we've never seen each otner. Keep them till our acquaintance is at least a few minutes old."

It was thus that she stopped the only attempt on my part to tell her of the mistake she was making. She led me to a tete-a-tete, where we took seats facing each other; then she said:

'Well, are you disappointed?'

"Disappointed? On the contrary, I'm delighted."

She lowered her eyes. She could not conceal the pleasure my appreciation called forth.

"And you?' I asked. "Are you disappointed in me?"

Her only answer was a smile, but it spoke far plainer than words that she was much pleased with me.

"I have told uncle all along," she said, "that the mere union of two miserable pieces of property would be no inducement to me. There must be something far beyond convenience."

"Certainly." I replied. "I confess it has bothered me to know that your land is worth more than mine."

There was evidently a match in progress in which two estates were to be joined. I was rich, but the lady might be richer. I was curious to know how rich she was.

"I have no idea what yours is worth," I remarked carelessly, "nor do I care."

"Uncle says it's worth $20,000, while yours is worth $30,000."

I breathed a sigh of relief. If it came to a tussle with the other fellow I could outbid him - I was heir to $400,000.

"Don t let us talk of such sordid matters. Let us rather speak of that union of hearts which is most important in marriage. Tell me if since seeing me you think you can love me."

"I don't know," she said, looking up at me archly. "It's too soon to tell."

A voluntary confession does not involve necessarily all the mean things a man has been guilty of, especially in an affair of love, so I will only say that I had a delightful visit, but the moment I got out of the hotel I felt like a cur. The thought of her discovery of my villainy horrified me. This came, I confess, not from a tender conscience, but because I had fallen in love with the girl I had deceived.

There was no great mystery about the matter, simply a coincidence, or rather a double coincidence. There was probably more than one Gilbert family in the hotel, and the man who was expected must have been of the same name as I. Nothing remained for me but to leave my rival to call in his own good time and uncover my villainy.

A year passed. I neither saw nor heard anything of her who must be Miss Gilbert, though I both wanted and dreaded to see her. A meeting came at last, and when it came it was so sudden that it quite took my breath away. At a ball one evening I was dancing a figure in which partners are changed, and suddenly found myself vis-a-vis with the lady whom I had so grossly deceived. I stood as if turned to stone. There was a momentary look on her face as if she might have seen me before. Then she accepted me for a partner as she would any other man who had not been introduced. We finished the figure without a word, and, inclining her head slightly, she left me.

I took steps at once to discover who she was and found, as I supposed, that she was Miss Gilbert.

Apparently she had not recognized me as the man she had received by mistake. At any rate I proposed to brazen it out that I was not. I secured an introduction and asked her to dance. What troubled me was that there was none of that delightful interchange of sympathy we had experienced. One thing she said pierced me to the heart. "You have the same name and greatly resemble a man who once treated me very dishonorably."

I thanked heaven that she did not know I was the same person and set out to win her as an entirely new identity. I found it uphill work. However, by exercising patience I finally succeeded, when she told me that I had to overcome her prejudice against me in my resemblance to the man who had acted so contemptibly. I shuddered at the narrow escape I had had in not being recognized, and declared that the fellow deserved a coat of tar and feathers.

One day after we had been married some time I concluded to confess that I was the man who had acted, as she always contended, very dishonorably. I did so fearfully and watched her expression as she received the confession. She was not in the least surprised. On the contrary, she told me that she knew me the moment she met me the second time. Moreover, she had refused the other fellow, hoping that I would follow the affair to an end.

THREE JURORS CURED

Of Cholera Morbus with One Small Bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy.

Mr. G. W. Fowler of Hightower, Ala., relates an experience he had while serving on a petit jury in a murder case at Edwardsville, county seat of Clebourne county, Alabama. He says: "While there I ate some fresh meat and some souse meat and it gave me cholera morbus in a very severe form. I was never more sick in my life and sent to the drug store for a certain cholera mixture, but the druggist sent me a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy instead, saying that he had what I sent for, but that this medicine was so much better he would rather send it to me in the fix I was in. I took one dose of it and was better in five minutes. The second dose cured me entirely. Two fellow jurors were afflicted in the same manner and one small bottle cured the three of us." Alfonso's Favorite Author.

King Alfonso has a fair claim to be regarded as the best educated of our crowned heads. He is a linguist, being familiar with French, Italian, German and English. He never travels without Goethe, Schiller, and the Austrian poet Grillparzer, whose name will be new to most people. Of the ancient classics King Alfonso prefers Horace, many of whose odes he has translated into Spanish. Moreover, he revels in mathematics and history, and adores drawing.—London Chronicle.

Fish by the Billion.

One no longer speaks of hatching thousands of young fish by artificial means but of millions and hundreds of millions. The number of eggs, fry, fingerlings and adult fish distributed by the United States Bureau of Fisheries in one year aggregated 1,500,000,000. That these fisheries are industries to-day is due entirely to artificial propagation.
