has spoken of the numbers as relating to the different offices, and has pointed them out to me. No. 1. was the lower bar on Bank lane. No. 2 was a lunch room, the door of which has now been closed up in the alterations of a few years past. No 3. was the office fronting on Calvert street, at the corner of Bank lane, originally the Post office, afterwards occupied by William McLaughlin as a lottery office, now called the new bar, and restaurant, and telegraph office. No 4, on Calvert street, was formerly occupied by Stockton and Stokes as a stage office, and is now a barber's shop, then come the steps leading into the hotel. No. 5. the first office north of the steps, was at various times occupied by tailors, but the first tenant's name has escaped me; it was frequently vacant; the last tenant as a tailor was Henry Bogue, who vacated in June, 1849, and was succeeded by Levi Long, boot maker, it is now occupied by Ross and Emerick, boot makers. No. 6 was formerly occupied by Sloan, boot maker, who was succeeded, at his death, by Levi Long, boot maker, who vacated in June, 1849, and move into No 5. from that time to the present it has been occupied by D. A. Randall (deponent) as a ladies' mineral water saloon. No. 7. David Barnum has told me was always occupied as a mineral water saloon, and was intended by him to be so from the erection of the building, that he himself started the business there, this I recollect distinctly; after carrying it on a few years, he rented it, together with the fixtures to William Carter, who had been the cake baker and confectioner in the hotel, in the fall of 1837. Carter having failed to pay his rent, Mr Barnum distrained on him, and in the spring of 1838, Mr Barnum leased the premises to Gifford and Keech who dissolved in October 1838, in the fall of 1838, they having dissolved. Randall and Keech leased from David Barnum said premises and fixtures; the first year we had no lease, but on extending the business and putting in more capital in 1839. I required a lease, which David Barnum gave for four years and six months from the first of October 1839. About 1843, or it may have been as early as 1842, Randall and Keech dissolved, and from that time to the present it has been occupied by D. A. Randall (the deponent,) individually. I have another lease dated the ninth day of August, 1844, from Anne K. Barnum and Ephraim K. Barnum, trustees under the will of David Barnum, for five years from the first of April, 1844, which also comprehended No. 8. of which I will speak presently, at a rent of four hundred dollars per annum, the lease calls for the cellars underneath, but I only got the cellar under No 7. and not that under No. 8 No. 8 the first office fronting on Fayette street was formerly occupied by Samuel Stump as a law office, about 1840 it was leased by Randall and Company for manufacturing mineral water, and is now occupied by D. A. Randall for the same purpose. No 9. the first tenant I can call to mind at this time was William P. Lightner, collector, it is now occupied by Emerick as a boot manufactory, No. 10 was occupied by Louis Scott as an intelligence office, next by a man named Robinson, known as Squire Robinson, for the same purpose, next by Thomas O. Sellers as a real estate and intelligence office, next by E. Beatty Graff as a law office, it is now used
