part of the house was not raised any more. There are roofs all round the house, except that Mr McSaughlin built at the upper corner. We continued the stairs one flight to the highest story, and made a close stair to the observatory. There were new window frames put in all around the new story, in the windows looking into the yard, as well as in those looking into the street; I can't give the number of rooms, but there is a great many. In the next story below we had to take out the old window frames and sashes, and put in new ones, but I don't know whether we put in new trimmings. The next story again had new frames and sashes, on the street, all around from the "Brown" house to the room farthest west on Bank lane, and new trimmings around the windows.

The next story, coming down, had new frames and sashes round from the "Brown" house to the same room, just as in the upper story. The next story, which contains the Ladies Drawing Room, had new frames and sashes all the way around to the "Brown" house, those windows were all retrimmed, and all the wood work in that story is new, except the floors. The next story, where the office is, I dont know what work was put in, without looking, through I would know my work, but there is all new work, and expensive work in that principal story from the same room on Bank lane round to the "Brown" house and I did a great deal of alteration, and fixed the office, which contains a great deal of work, there are two new stair cases, one leading to the barber's shop, and the other to the water closets. I desire also to state that we also raised the building one story on Bank lane, which was all plain work, with a new roof, with rooms on both sides looking into the lane and into the yard, for servants' rooms, with a walk above for drying clothes. We also put up four large baloonies for hoisting coal to each story, and there is a large carving room beside the dining room. There one of the stairs I have mentioned goes into the barber's shop and bar room, the bar was laid with new joists, to make it strong enough for the stone flooring and stone work, and the same was done in the lower bar, by the kitchen.

There is a great deal I can't name, but I have mentioned the principal work in the old building.

Fourth Interrogatory. In what capacity were you employed during the work of which you have spoken as done in the old building since the death of David Barnum?

4 Answer. I was employed as superintendent, you may call it, I superintend my own hands in the carpenter's work, but the others had their own foremen, if anything was wanted I went and got it.

Fifth Interrogatory. What connection if any, had you with the work done by foundrymen, masons, plasterers and so forth?

5 Answer. None in the world, except, if they wanted carpenters to do anything, to send them a man.

Sixth Interrogatory. Can you name the person or persons, who did the brick work in the improvements
