Easton Gazette.
WILSON M. TYLOR & BRO.,
Editors and Proprietors.
EASTON, MD.

Saturday, June 16, 1894.

All persons who owe us money previous to January first 1894, are requested to make immediate settlement. Money not paid by July first 1894, will be placed in the hands of an officer to collect. This applies to all accounts due the GAZETTE.

THE fact should be noted that capital as well as labor has been thrown out of employment by the change of administration.

THE Star is in error in stating that the late C. Ridgely Goodwin died before taking office. Mr. Goodwin qualified and took formal charge of the office of Surveyor of the Port of Baltimore on Monday morning, May 14th,—signed official papers during the week, and died Saturday evening, the 19th.

THE fellow who subscribes for a paper and imposes on the editor's forbearance year after year without offering a cent in return nor even a feeble excuse for not settling, but who suddenly insults the editor by sending the paper back through the mails marked "refused" is dishonest and cowardly.

THERE are many so-called christians who are particular to observe the fastings and feasts of the church and partake liberally of the "sacrament," who have no conception of the sacredness of a business promise nor the responsidility resting on them in the payment of a just debt. Man cannot be dutiful to his God and negligent to his fellow man.

THE Kelleyites and the Coxeyites are parasites upon the liberality of the industrious poor. They are levying contributions, not upon the rich, for the rich give little to such enterprises, but upon the hard working poor, whose sympathies are easily moved, and who are always ready to share their small means with those whom they believe to be in need. The beggars of every city live upon what they get from the tenements of the humble, not from what they get from the palaces of the rich, and hence it is that the organized vagrancy of the country, is able to draw sustenance from a class who can ill afford to give it, rather than from a class who could give it without missing it. This makes the offence of these sham "workingmen" all the greater and more despicable, and makes it still more the duty of honest men everywhere to frown upon them and dispise them.

REPRESENTATIVE BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, has shown himself to be the possessor of a skin as thick as that of a rhinoceros, but thick as it is it was penetrated by a direct shot from his democratic colleagues in the House. He has been boasting of his intention to take charge of the general deficiency appropriation bill when it was ready to be reported to the House, by virtue of his being chairman of the sub-committee which has charge of that bill. As soon as his democratic colleagues found out that he really meant to do so they lodged a formal protest with chairman Sayers of the appropriation committee, and the result was that Mr. Sayers informed Breckinridge that he would not be allowed to take charge of the bill, because of the refusal of democratic members to recognize his leadership in even so small a matter as the management of a bill which usually goes through without any serious opposition. If Breckinridge were not entirely without the sense of shame he would resign from Congress and withdraw from his contest for renomination.

OLIVE SCHREINER, the young authoress, well known in the literary world is figuring prominently in the public press just now. Not long ago Miss Schreiner was married, and the question arose as to whether she would allow the usual rules of marriage to submerge the financially valuable Olive Schreiner into Mrs. Olive Cronwright. She might have compromised on Schreiner-Cronwright, or she might have retained her maiden name for literary purposes and become Mrs Cronwright in private life. But she was neither a compromiser nor a double-dealer, and she cut the Gordian knot by making the husband do the changing. It thus happens that Mr. Conwright is Mr. Schreiner, and Miss Olive Schreiner is Mrs. Olive Schreiner. In speaking of the subject of brides taking their husband's names, the Baltimore Sun of Wednesday has a very interesting editorial in which it says:

"In barbarous times and among savage people, if a man wanted a wife he would go out and hunt one, just as he would food or some other thing essential to his comfort, and after he had bagged her, would take her home and set her to cooking and making herself generally useful. She was his property by right of capture, and he called her by his name to prevent any mistakes in the matter of title. Possibly, originally, he may have branded her with his mark to keep thieves and unprovided bachelors from helping themselves to his stock. As time went by, however, and women became more abundant, wives were much more easily captured, their disposition to run away from wife-hunters apparently decreasing in precise proportion to the increase in their number, and it became unnecessary to do more than bring them into the household camp and give them the name of their owner.

"The custom of forcing the wife to assume her husband's name and regarding her as a sort of matrimonial chattel finally became so firmly established that woman herself came to acquiesce in it as a matter of course and even to take a pride in it. But there is clearly neither logic nor justice in it, and the coming woman is likely to protest against it as a survival of barbarism and as a mark of inequality. If a man nowadays, when he feels in want of a wife, went out as he did in in the early ages and captured one, there would be some reason for imposing his name upon her. But in point of fact he does not do all the hunting and capturing at the present day. He is quite frequently the hunted and captured and it is the height of audacity for him in such cases to expect his captor to take his name and allow him all the honors of war. Apart from such considerations as these, there is no more reason why a woman should take a man's name when she marries him than that the man should take hers. If there is to be a change, why should he not change his? When J. Jones marries M. Smith why should he not be known as Mr. Mary Smith, rather than she as Mrs. John Jones? What has been logic for the goose all these years ought to be logic for the gander under the new dispensation.

"Before the fall of man and the period when he was forced to capture his wives there appears to have been perfect equity and equality in the matter of names in matrimonial contracts. When Eve married she did not change her name to Mrs. Adam. She insisted on preserving her individuality and her family identity by retaining her maiden name. Nor do business partners at the present time surrender their names when they enter into these relations. Why should not something of the same sort be done in matrimonial partnerships? If a woman named Green should marry a man named Dunn, for instance, the firm could be known as Green, Dunn & Co., the company being the general name for the children. If Mrs. Green should have a son John who should marry a woman named Brown he could sign himself John Green-Dunn Brown. In this way the family pedigree could be preserved in the names and the family tree would be easily climbed. The fact that family names would soon grow as long as the titles of some of the foreign princes who marry American girls furnishes no valid objection to this suggestion, but rather an aristocratic charm."

COL. W. SCOTT ROBERTS, of the Centreville Record, and Geo. E. Haddaway, Esq., of the Easton Ledger, represented the Eastern Shore at the "luncheon" given editors and prominent business men by the Baltimore Centennial Association at the Merchant's Club, in Balto., Thursday afternoon. The occasion was a most interesting one, and had for its purpose a discussion of the plan to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of Baltimore's incorporation as a city by a great "Southern Exposition" to be held in that city in 1897. Nearly two hundred persons were present, and among others who made addresses were Governor Frank Brown, Mayor Latrobe, Gen. Adam E. King, late consul at Paris, and Attorney General John P. Poe. These speeches were strong, forcible and to the point, and were received with much interest and applause. Gen. King, who has visited all the principle cities of Europe, told how little Baltimore was known over there and urged that the citizens of that city lay aside their modesty and by a united effort let the world know of its geographical and commercial opportunities, its industrial growth, fine climate, hospitable people, and fairest women in the world. He paid Maryland an eloquent tribute. Gov. Brown promised to do the best he could to make the Exposition a great success whether out of office or in it—and Mayor Latrobe expressed faith that the city of Baltimore would do her part. We failed to get the report of Mr. Haddaway's speech—but that gentleman no doubt measured up to the occasion.

THE ENGLISH IDEA.

AN UNDERCURRENT OF ANXIETY TO SECURE OUR TRADE.

Interesting Comments From the British Press That Show How They Want to Sell Their Goods—Closed American Factories Mean Riches For England.

Exports to the United States have not been going out quite so freely as otherwise might have been anticipated, and if the new tariff bill is accepted by the senate a large increase in tonnage is most probable.—Morning, England.

The (Wilson) bill would reduce the duties in many cases if it became law, and intending exporters to the States are therefore holding back all the goods they can in order to escape the McKinley duties, should these be ultimately repealed.—East Anglian (Ipswich) Times.

It will be a bad lookout for Welsh tin workers if America ever succeeds in making enough tin plates to meet its own consumption. It will be still worse if America can manufacture more than sufficient for its own wants, for that will mean competition with Wales in markets now its own.—Western Mail, Cardiff, Wales.

There is at present going through the United States congress a measure which ought to prove of vast importance to Irish trade, but especially to the woolen industry in this country. The time to be in the field is not when the new tariff has been in operation some time, but on the first day that it comes into play. The English and Scotch and other woolen makers will make a rush for possession. —Dublin Telegram.

The Americans will settle their tariff with an eye to their own interests and not to ours. As free traders we may think the two identical, but the Americans are a long way from seeing matters in the same light. British manufacturers should not let any chances slip them of utilizing to the full any opportunities for increased trade with the States a reformed tariff may one day afford them. But they must not trust too confidingly to a reopening of an undoubtedly fine market.—London Commerce.

The truth is that the effectual cure of the grave evils which afflict the body politic in the United States, and which, in spite of the immense natural resources of the republic, have evolved there a social problem at least as formidable and urgent as any which confronts the crowded states of the old world, will never be accomplished until the people have got rid of the mere sordid adventurers who have been allowed to usurp the management of their affairs.—Glasgow Herald.

In the Swansea and Llanelly district, which is by far the largest tin plate producing one in Wales, the news that the tariff bill had been passed by such a large majority was welcomed with unmistakable demonstrations of satisfaction. At this moment, when the industry is in such a depressed state, no news could be better than this from America, for with a reduction to nearly the old tariff rate the old prosperous and regular state of the industry may be looked to in the near future.—Western Mail, Cardiff, Wales.

The depression during the last two years in Wales has been felt so keenly that we can forgive the great rejoicing over the failure of the trade in the States, although Llanelly and Swansea people who are rejoicing at the failure of some of our employers who invested some of their capital in the States would do well to remember that had they been successful a goodly number were preparing quietly to follow their example and are now patriotic only owing to the force of circumstances.—Western Mail, Cardiff, Wales.

We must expect that the Wilson tariff bill will be keenly fought at every stage, and that plausible reasons will be found for not allowing it to interfere too summarily with vested rights and interests which have grown up under the McKinley tariff. In such a state of affairs as this and with so doubtful a future before them it will be well for our own merchants and manufacturers not to expect too much from the Wilson tariff bill and not to be overforward in making preparation for changes which it may or may not affect.—London Times.

The writer in The Industrial World would have been more in place had he vented his indignation against the telegram which a short time ago it was stated would be sent to President Cleveland by the tin platers, thanking him for his efforts in repealing the McKinley bill, which, on the face of it, was a glaring indiscretion and would lead the Republican party to believe that President Cleveland was subsidized by South Wales tin platers. The indications are now that the immense popularity of President Cleveland will insure his election for another term, and providing the tarriff is now arranged on the lines already laid down, and if President Cleveland or the Democratic party with a leader of the same pronounced opinions as Cleveland retain power after the next election we can count upon a good run of trade here for seven or eight years.—Western Mail, Cardiff, Wales.

President Cleveland's bill, while it does not go so far in the direction of free trade as it might do, yet makes changes of vast importance, which must have a highly beneficial effect, and in many respects it goes further than many people in this country anticipated. The bill has yet to pass through the senate, and it is likely there to meet with more or less strenuous opposition. The new section dealing with income tax will in particular be unwelcome in that assembly. Whatever may be done with regard to this portion of the bill, however, it is practically certain that the senate will have to pass the tariff portion into law, even if some modifications are introduced. A fiscal reform which must have an immense influence and impetus upon the trade both of America and this country is therefore assured.—Leeds (England) Express.

The Turkeys of Tiffin.

Friend Kimmel, writing from the Heidelberg university, at Tiffin, O., says that there seems to be an analogy existing between our present free trade Democracy and two old time turkey trappers that used to reside in that vicinity. One of the trappers built a pen and succeeded in catching three fine wild turkeys. But while putting them into the pen one got away from him, so he foolishly threw down the two he had in his hands to run after the one that got away. The other trapper, seeing the race, exclaimed, "Run, Boltie, run!" But Boltie failed to run fast enough, and so lost all his turkeys.

In like manner our free trade friends want to throw down our large, certain and profitable home market to risk acquiring a small share in the sometimes unprofitable and always uncertain so called "markets of the world." The only difference seems to be that of the two the free trader is the bigger fool, for the trapper risked losing only 66⅔ per cent in order to catch 33⅓ per cent, while the free trader risks losing 98 per cent in order to acquire the meager and uncertain 2 per cent.

There are said to be large tracts of country in Cuba still unexplored.
