CAN THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY BE TRUSTED?

A subscriber having reminded us of our failure to make any response to a recent editorial in the Star, we continue the discussion by stating that we have neyer regretted that the Democratic Congress has not carried out the policy of that party; nor have we ever praised Senators Gorman. Brice, Hill and others who have acted with them—neither have we approved of their course. We could never have been guilty of such blindness and folly as that would imply. Our contemporary exhibits a singular dullness of discrimination when it concludes that we have grown so reckless as it insinuates, when discussing the failure of Democratic Senators and Representatives in Congress to keep the pledges of their party as enunciated in the Chicago platform of 1892. There could be no reason why we should regret the inability of the Democrats in Congress to incorporate the false doctrines and vicious threats of that platform into the statutes of the United States. We rejoice that their party cannot inflict so great a calamity upon the country. What we have held throughout is, that the National Democracy is made up of such incongruous elements, and is so utterly devoid of cohesive power, except for public plunder, that it cannot materialize into a practical homocentric. In our reference to Senator Gorman and those who aided him in restricting the passage of the Wilson bill, we alluded to the surroundings and interests which influenced them and induced them to oppose that measure. Had they allowed that bill to become a law without their opposition, they would have known the Senate Chamber, after the expiration of their terms, no more forever,

The popular elections which have come off since the accession of the democracy to power, are a most vigorous and unmistakable protest against the measures presented to the two houses, and the inefficient and dilatory methods of considering them. Senators Gorman, Brice and others discerned the approaching storm of popular indignation and saw that it foreshadowed the destruction of the Democratic party, and they sought to ward off the death blow by the compromise bill which concedes the soundness of the protective principle as advocated by the Republican party. Although the proposed compromise measure falls short of adequate protection to American labor and American industries, it was, perhaps the best that they could hope to carry through, and was their last refuge from the tempest that was sweeping the Democratic party to destruction. They simply laid the tariff plank of their party platform on the altar as a sacrificial offering.

The late elections had terrified Gorman. He knows what they mean; and he was exasperated at the southern contingent that they should attempt tn defy public sentiment when the people were joined by the press in denouncing the course of the Democratic party in Congress. In the last two weeks there have been two more protests:—Oregon went 15,000 Republican, another dreadful election; and the election of a supreme judge in the Fourth District of Illinois, which is comprised of the twelve counties in southwestern Illinois, known out there as "Egypt," which have persistently gone democratic since the organization of the Republican party forty years ago, until last week, when they gave a majority for the Republican candidate of over 4,000—all of the twelve counties but one went Republican. Whereas, in 1892, these counties gave Mr. Cleveland over 7,000 majority, a gain of 11,000. This is another horrible election, but the people want a "change" and they are going to have it. They want protection and they mean to have it. The Democrats are bewildered over these "disgusting elections." Watterson, the star-eyed-Goddess says, "Blot elections out of the Constitution, especially honest ones. Abolish the elections. Give us a free hack ride to the grave yard. Give us a hand organ; give us a ball game. Give us a rest from elections. Give us anything, provided you stop the elections and swipe the word out of the dictionary." We plainly tell the Star that it is these wretched elections, these disgustingly large Republican majorities that are changing the schedules in the Wilson bill, the Finance Committee's bill and the Gorman Compromise tariff bill.

The Star further expressed the hope that every Republican Senator would vote for the tariff bill that the democracy would give the country, and thus "drive the lie down the throats of Republican orators and newspaper editors who have declared if ever the Democratic party should again return to power it would ruin the country." Our neighbor employs strong language, but we would suggest that there is no occasion to grow violent. The Star should keep its temper under control, and it would do well to suppress its wild hopes. No Republican Senator will ever become crazy enough to vote for any tariff bill that shall emanate from a dislocated and dissolving party, that is arraigned before the country by its own followers as untrue to pledges, and accused of complicity with a gigantic and corrupt trust to plunder the American people of thirty millions of dollars within the next twelve months. The leaders of the party have become ungovernably mercenary since its return to power, and they are being assailed all over the country by prominent Democratic journals.

The Democratic party is back in power and the ambrosia of democratic expectations has been dissipated. Who can deny that since the second advent of Grover Cleveland, with his Democratic Congress at his back, the country has drifted into a precarious condition? Thousands of business men have been ruined and a million of toilers have suffered a reduction of wages or been doomed to idleness: wide-spread depression hangs like a night-mare over the country, and the democratic leaders, disappointed and overwhelmed, stand aghast at the perilous condition of the country and seem hopeless, helpless and undone.

During Harrison's administration, as before stated in these columns, prosperity rewarded the hand of industry; but Democratic orators and newspapers told the people they were being robbed, and the people believed them and raised the Democratic party to power. But now they see that it was, these democratic orators and newspapers which misled them by misstatements and literary trash, and they have become incredulous, and are giving closer attention to political questions, and are now voting understandingly, and hence the terrible defeats that have overtaken the Democratic party in the late elections wherever there is an honest ballot.

The Star says we are on the eve of a great revival of trade, and prosperous times are seen in the early dawn of coming events—that the depression has spent its force. We sincerely wish this might prove to be the case, but we fear the signs of the times do not betoken any such favorable outcome, but rather denote the gloom and hopelessness that Democratic times gave us in 1837 and 1857, when bankruptcy, want and distress walked at noon-day and made night hideous. We must confess that we are unable to discern any prospect of relief in the measures that the Democrats in Congress have proposed, as they are at war with the teachings of our past experience. The temper of the people is against these measures; and the result of the recent elections plainly indicate that they mean to overthrow the rule of the National democracy as they did in 1860, when it showed its unfitness to be entrusted with the destinies of the country.

Our neighbor is wasting time over a rehash of the repeal of the Federal election law, which was passed when the ballot box all over the South was controlled by arbitrary force and meant anything that a poluted ballot box would yield, chiefly systematic fraud, as it does in some parts of Maryland today. The twaddle about the "restoration of silver" is too meaningless to deserve review at our hands.

The Star in this recent issue chased more rainbows than usual, but we can understand why this is. This journal is struggling to get into the "promised land," and it has an idea that the rainbow has something to do with it. The tidings it has from the South that foreshadow the revival of business in that section is senseless vision. And it further says, but for the obstacles which the Republicans in the Senate have placed in the way, the tariff bill would now pass and its passage would bring better times. Well, we thought the trouble in the Senate over the Wilson bill, and the tariff question generally, arose from a disagreement among the Democratic Senators as to what the law should contain; and the difficulty about silver legislation is an irreconcilable difference of opinion in the Democrats. And the exhibition, a few days ago, in the House on the question of the ten per cent. tax on State bank issues was somewhat extraordinary, in view of the plank in the Chicago platform which demanded its repeal. This plank was repudiated by a Democratic House by about seventy majority. Alas, for Democratic pledges! Alas, for the country! The only salvation left is the overthrow of the Democratic party, and that is what is coming.

WE do not claim to have the best paper in the world nor the best in the county, nor the best in the town. In fact we have a poor paper, and we do not understand why people insist on having it. But if they can stand it we can, and we will try to not let it get any worse, though the rations are scarce about now.

TO-DAY the peninsular editors and their wives or sweethearts are invited on a free railroad trip without hotel expenses to Asbury Park where the National Editorial Association is in session. The fact that no arrangements have been made for a free bath upon arrival will deter many editors from making the trip. The bath in the ocean will cost a quarter, while the old tub at home is free all around, from the editor to the pickaninny in the kitchen, it responds without a murmur.

Skobeleff's Rebuff.

General Skobeleff believed in briefly addressing men and stating clearly what was expected of them before leading them to an attack. He had a fine command of language and a personal magnetism that inspired the confidence which impels masses of men to concerted action. On one occasion he had ordered a certain colonel to carry out an important plan. Before moving to its execution the colonel attempted to address his regiment, but not having the trick of speech blundered for words and finally broke down. When Skobeleff could stand it no longer, he turned sharply on the colonel, saying, so the regiment could hear it: "If at a moment like this words fail you, it is because you haven't any clear idea of what you propose to do. At times like this the heart will speak, and if the heart doesn't speak it is because you haven't any heart for the fight." Then, with a few inspiring words, he sent the regiment flying to its charge.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Her Story of a Theater.

Julian Hawthorne wrote a story printed a long time ago in some magazine. In it he had a little girl tell a little boy what a theater, which he had never seen, was like. And this is what she tells him:

"Oh, it's where everything is the way it ought to be, and the people do things that make you laugh and cry, and they seem to live all their lives, and yet it is over in two or three hours. And everything they say means something, instead of being only 'How do you do?' and 'It's a fine day,' as real people do, and they tell you all they feel and all they mean to do, just as you think when you are alone. Then, when it's over, a great curtain comes down, and you go out, and there are people going up and down the streets, just as if nothing had happened, and it's so common and stupid you can hardly bear it. It makes you wish there were no real people alive."—New York Times.
