34 answer. Because there was considerable delay before they - before the acknowledgments was taken.

Thirty-fifth cross-interrogatory. Is that your only reason?

35. answer. For the delay; they were certainly in no hurry, as the conversation between Mr. Wilson and them was kept up for sometime - some considerable time - in a very pleasant way.

Thirty-sixth cross-interrogatory. Did Mrs. Elizabeth Hubbard, or Mrs. George W. Hubbard, or Mrs. Mary Joseph Hubbard, say that they were waiting for Mr. Thomas Hubbard?

36 answer. I don't recollect; that was my interpretation of the waiting.

Thirty-seventh cross-interrogatory. Why was this your interpretation?

37 answer. Because I had been away from my office longer than I had expected; that is my only reason.

Thirty-eighth cross-interrogatory. Is the initial "T." in the word "twentieth," on the first line of page one of the paper, the only difference in the formation of the letters of that word between it and the same word in the acknowledgment?

38 answer. The only difference that I see is, that the "i" in the first page; the "i" in the first page has a dot, and the "i" in the other has none; that is the only difference that I see.

Thirty-ninth cross-interrogatory. Look at the first "e" in the word "twentieth," as written on the first line of the first page, and the first "e" in the same word in the acknowledgment, and state whether those two "es" are not made entirely different?

39 answer. I see there is a difference; yes, sir; but I did not see it until my attention was called to it.

Fortieth cross-interrogatory. In whose handwriting is the word "August" on the second line of the first page of the paper?

40 answer. I think it is my handwriting, but I am not sure.

Forty-first cross-interrogatory. In whose handwriting is the word "August" in the acknowledgment?

41 answer. They are both in the same handwriting; I think it is in mine, sir.

Forty second cross-interrogatory. Do you say that the word "August" in the acknowledgment is in the same handwriting as the word "twentieth" and the words "the City of Baltimore" in that acknowledgment?

42 answer. I wouldn't like to say.

Forty third cross-interrogatory. Did you not say in your examination-in-chief, that the words "twentieth" and the words "the City of Baltimore", were in your handwriting?

43 answer. Yes, sir; to the best of my knowledge and belief, it is - one minute - the word "City" there I don't think is in my handwriting.

Forty-fourth cross-interrogatory. I ask you if you did not say in your examination-in-chief, that the words "the City of Baltimore" are in your handwriting?

44 answer. I may have said so, but I discover since that answer by examining the paper, "of Baltimore" is the part I filled in in the acknowledgment.

Forty fifth cross-interrogatory. Now I ask you all the words "the City of Baltimore" in the acknowledgment, are not "in the same handwriting?"

45 answer. I think not, sir.

Forty-sixth cross-interrogatory. How does it happen if
