they are not, and that the words "of Baltimore" are in your handwriting, that the other words "the city" are not in your handwriting?

45 answer. I think not, sir.

Forty sixth cross-interrogatory. How does it happen if they are not, and that the words "of Baltimore" are in your handwriting, that the other words "the city" are not in your handwriting?

46 answer. The only reason that I can account for is, that the party who made the paper must have neglected to fill it in.

Forty-seventh cross-interrogatory. Who is this party to whom you allude in your last answer?

47 answer. Mr. Willson, or whoever drawed the paper, I don't know who drawed the paper.

Forty-eighth cross-interrogatory. Do you say that the words, "the city," in the acknowledgment, are in the same handwriting as the body of the acknowledgment or the body of the paper?

48 answer. No, sir.

Forty ninth cross-interrogatory. Why then did you say that al- but the words, "of Baltimore," were filled in by the party who drew the paper?

49 answer. I see that "the City of Baltimore" occurs in two places; I did not notice that before: "the City of Baltimore," in the fourth line, is in my handwriting.

Fiftieth cross-interrogatory. Now I ask you again, why, if you are able to say, that the words, "the City of Baltimore," in the fourth line of the acknowledgment, are in your handwriting, and you say the word "August," in the same acknowledgment, is in your handwriting, you said heretofore, that you cannot tell whether the word

"August" is in the same handwriting with the words, "the City of Baltimore?"

50 answer. Because I recognize the words, "the City of Baltimore," on the fourth line, and the words "of Baltimore," on the first line, but can't recognize the word "August" in the acknowledgement.

Fifty-first cross-interrogatory. Did you not say a few moments ago, that the word "August" in the acknowledgment is in your handwriting?

51 answer. I may have said so, but now on reflection, can't recognize the word "August."

Fifty-second cross-interrogatory. Then you do not know who wrote the word "August," in the acknowledgment, or the same word in the second line of the first page, do you?

52 answer. No, sir.

Fifty-third cross-interrogatory. What knowledge have you of the writing of the word "August," in either of these places?

53 answer. I may have written it, but I can't recognize it; that is all the knowledge I have; if not, it must have been before it came into my hand.

Fifty-fourth cross-interrogatory. How do you know that?

54 answer. I only suppose so.

Fifty-fifth cross-interrogatory. Is that your only answer?

55 answer. At this time, yes, sir.

Fifty-sixth cross-interrogatory. How is it that you recollect the other matters you have testified to about the paper, and cannot say anything about the word "August?"

56 answer. There appears to be a doubt in my mind about the word "August;" sometimes it appears to be
