Sixty-third cross-interrogatory. Can you give any facts or circumstances that makes you say that it was before eleven O'clock?

63 answer. No, sir, not any more than my memory or my opinion of that matter; I might possibly, if I had time, I might fix some facts to locate it.

Sixty-fourth cross-interrogatory. Well, I give you time as much as you want, to think of any fact or circumstance which will enable you to give any reason why you are sure that it was before eleven O'clock? Take your time.

54 answer. At this time I can't think of any facts to establish the time; might as well give it up; I am still satisfied the former answer was correct.

Sixty-fifth cross-interrogatory. If you cannot state that it was on the twentieth of August that you went there, except for the fact that the paper bears date on the twentieth of August, how is it that you can be certain of the hour of the day on which you went there?

65 answer. The reason is, I am satisfied in my mind that the engagement was in the morning at the time stated, but as to date, of course I never kept any record of the matter, and have no idea at all what date.

Sixty-sixth cross-interrogatory. May it then have been in Italy that you went there for the purpose of taking an acknowledgment?

66 answer. So far as my memory goes it might, as I only take the paper for the date - no recollection.

Sixty-seventh cross-interrogatory. Who did you see when you entered the house, and before you went upstairs into the room in which you say the paper was acknowledged?

67 answer. I think it was Mrs. Hubbard, but am not sure; Mrs Hubbard or one of her family.

Sixty-eighth cross-interrogatory. Describe the house, and how it was used down stairs?

68 answer. There was a store in front, I am satisfied in the front room.

Sixty-ninth cross-interrogatory. Was it in the store that you first met Mrs. Hubbard on that occasion?

69 answer. Not sure.

Seventieth cross-interrogatory. Did you go to see Mrs. Hubbard, with Mr. Dunnington and his agent, Mr. Fowler, after January, eighteen hundred and eighty two?

70 answer. I did.

Seventy-first cross-interrogatory. Was she living in the same house at that time, in which she was living at the time that you took the acknowledgment of which you have spoken, in the year eighteen hundred and eighty?

71 answer. I thought so at first, but was informed it was not the same house - both being stores - stores in each of the houses.

Seventy-second cross-interrogatory. What do you mean by saying that you thought so at first, and by whom and when were you informed to the contrary?

72 answer. Not remembering the house, one of the other gentlemen must have known it by the number or otherwise; when in conversation, I mentioned about the paper being signed upstairs, and was informed by some one of the family that it was the other house; a house that they had moved from where the transaction took place.
