Seventy-third cross-interrogatory. State all the conversation to which you allude, and how it came about?

73 answer. I had no general conversation - only when questioned; Mr. Dunnington and the other gentleman I don't recollect his name, I think his name is Bank-ard - had the general conversation.

Seventy-fourth cross-interrogatory. On the day on which the paper which you have mentioned was signed upstairs at Mrs. Hubbard's house, tell what happened after you went upstairs; by this I mean describe each successive step connected with the execution of the paper?

74 answer. After going upstairs and being introduced, I sat down, when Mr. Willson and the company entered into a conversation, and, as I thought, were waiting for one of the sons, when Mr. Willson told me to read a paper, which I did, when I handed it back; after some time Mr. Willson asked me to come up to the table and take the acknowledgments; which I did.

Seventy-fifth cross-interrogatory. Go on and say what acknowledgments you took?

75 answer. The acknowledgments on that paper which was exhibited to me last time.

Seventy-sixth cross-interrogatory. Who signed that paper in your presence?

76 answer. I am satisfied Mrs. Hubbard signed it, and her daughter signed it; that's my idea of it; if I had the paper it would refresh my memory; I can't recollect the names without it; Mrs. Hubbard makes her mark; is it necessary to state that?

Seventy-seventh cross-interrogatory. Who else signed it besides Mrs. Hubbard, her daughter - by which expression I understand you mean her daughter-in-law - and her son, in your presence?

77 answer. Mr. Willson must have signed it at the table before I was called up; I didn't see him sign; he was engineering the whole matter, or rather was attending to it.

Seventy-eighth cross-interrogatory. Why do you say he must have signed it before you were called up, when you say at the same time that you did not see him sign it?

78 answer. Because his name appears there and he acknowledged - in fact they all acknowledged it on the question being asked.

Seventy-ninth cross-interrogatory. Who do you mean by all acknowledged it?

79 answer. The parties on the paper - the parties whose names appeared on the paper.

Eightieth cross-interrogatory. Who were they?

80 answer. I have the paper to refresh my memory about the names; I might give the wrong names.

Eighty-first cross-interrogatory. Well, if you cannot tell who acknowledged it without looking at the paper, how do you know there might not be names in that paper of persons who did not acknowledge it before you?

81 answer. I see there is a party who did not acknowledge it before me on the paper.

(The solicitor of the defendant desires the Commissioner to note that the witness had not seen the paper at this sitting.)

Eighty-second cross-interrogatory. You have said that Mrs. Hubbard signed the paper by making her mark; who wrote her name on this paper?
