82 answer. Can't say without seeing the paper.

Eighty-third cross-interrogatory. Have you no recollection on this subject without looking at the paper?

83 answer. I recollect there was some controversy—some talk about the matter at the time, but can't say who wrote Mrs. Hubbard's name without seeing the paper.

Eighty-fourth cross-interrogatory. What was the talk about which you allude in your last answer, and when did it occur?

84 answer. It occurred then and there, and must have been in regard to who should write Mrs. Hubbard's name.

Eighty-fifth cross-interrogatory. You have not answered my question fully inasmuch as I asked you what the talk was?

85 answer. I can't remember any particular talk other than the matter of writing the name.

Eighty-sixth cross-interrogatory. Well, what was said on this subject, and who said what was said?

86 answer. The only conversation that I recollect that was had, to my recollection, was in regard to a disinterested witness to witness the paper—witness the mark rather—with me, as it has always been my custom to require a disinterested person to witness a mark, and so stated; but on the satisfactory manner in which everything appeared to be, I allowed one of the signers present to witness the mark; the only thing that I seen that didn't bear out the views I formerly entertained with regard to the paper, there appears a male name instead of, as I supposed, a female.

Eighty-seventh cross-interrogatory. You have not answered my question as to what the talk or conversation was, as to who should write Mrs. Hubbard's name, as she could not write it herself; I did not ask you anything as to the witnessing of her signature; now I ask you again what the talk or conversation was in reference to who should write her name?

87 answer. I don't remember any particular conversation in regard to that matter—in regard to writing her name; there may have been conversation.

Eighty-eighth cross-interrogatory. Did you not say a while ago, when I asked who wrote Mrs. Hubbard's name to the paper, that there was some controversy, some talk about the matter, but can't say who wrote her name without seeing the paper?

88 answer Yes, sir.

Eighty-ninth cross-interrogatory. Now I ask you what that talk about who should write her name was?

89 answer. I can't possibly recollect.

Ninetieth cross-interrogatory. Who took part in the talk on this subject?

90 answer. I suppose Mr. Willson and myself; it is all a supposition, for I don't recollect.

Ninety-first cross-interrogatory. What makes you suppose that?

91 answer. Because my opinion is that Mrs. Hubbard not writing her own name; that I preferred some one else to write it for her; some one interested in the matter; that's the only supposition I can give.

Ninety-second cross-interrogatory. My last question did not ask you who wrote her name, but it was what made you think or suppose that the conversation on the subject took place between you and Willson; why, in answer to that question, did you state, when you were not asked, that you preferred that some one interested
