This Dream had its Opposite.

I had a dream the other night when everything was still,
I thought I saw our old stove go rolling down the hill;
When I awoke and went down stairs, allayed were all my fears,
The same old stove was good as new, the one we've had for years.
This is the key to the mystery.

How Women Increase Care.

Oh, woman, if you will have carpets somebody must propel the sweeper; if you must have stuffy curtains and hangings some one must fight the invading moth; if you will make your house an art galery, a museum of modern curios, a furniture warehouse, a china emporium, a toy-shop and a World's Fair in miniature—why, you make it a dimple of loveliness, but know this, my daughter, and hear it for thy good, she that increaseth bric-a brac increaseth care, and much bijouterie is a weariness of the flesh, writes R. J. Burdett in his own inimitable way on "The Taskmistress of woman" in the November Ladies' Home Journal. But all this is your own doing. Wherefore, do not come around the den of the man, wailing that woman's work is never done: that you are tired to death, and that you have no time to read or improve yourself. Go to your mirror and make faces at the responsible party. Of course, the monster enjoys all these things—the exquisite taste and the art and the loveliness in his house. He enjoys the toothsome breakfast and the dainty china, the elaborate luncheon and the great dinner. But he does not really need so much, and I doubt very much if it is good for him; he is always apt to get more than is good for him.

LITERARY NOTES.

The complete novel in the November number of LIPPINCOTT'S is "An Unsatisfactory Lover," by Mrs. Hungerford ("The Duchess"). It tells, in the style which has charmed so many readers, of an inauspicious wooing and an interrupted courtship, which at length led to a happy result—for the lover did not always remain unsatisfactory.

The ninth in the series of Lippincott's Notable Stories is "The Rustlers," by Alice MacGowan. It is a powerful tale of the panhandle of Texas. Other short stories, or sketches are "How the Light Came," by J. Armoy Knox, which narrates a pathetic incident of French-Canadian life, and "Expensive Religion," by Phil Stansbury, an episode in the experience of a colored brother.

The Athletic Series is continued in an article on "Golf" by John Gilmer Speed.

Lewis M. Haupt tells of "Progress in Local Transportation;" Dr. Charles C. Abbott describes "An Old-Fashioned Garden," which contains shade and water, and by consequence also the music of birds; and Wilton Tournier tells, "Why the Body should be Cultivated."

"A Three-Volume Tract," reviewed by Fredric M. Bird, is Madam Sarah Grand's remarkable novel, "The Heavenly Twins." M. Crofton continues his series of "Men of the Day" with a brief sketch of Attorney-General Olvey.

The poetry of the number is supplied by Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen, Bliss Carman, Richard E. Burton, and Florence E. Pratt.

A famous man is always interesting when he tells how he did the thing which brought him his reputation, and there is a particular charm about Frank R. Stockton's narrative, which opens the November Ladies' Home Journal, of how he conceived and wrote his famous story, "The Lady or the Tiger?", what came of his writing, and the condition of his own mind at the present time, of the correct solution of the story. The inner personality of Mr. Howells has, perhaps, never been brought so close to his public as in the many-sided sketches of the novelist which Professor H. H. Boyesen writes of him in this number of the magazine, under the title of "Mr. Howells at Close Range."

The beau ideal of an American girl and the pride of his family and friends is a military or navel cadet, but there is a substantial basis for the estimation in which he is held. Not every one can enter our National Academies, and every one who does has to work hard to keep up his reputation. "The Naval Cadet at Work and at Play," a prize article written by a naval cadet, published in DEMOREST'S FAMILY MAGAZINE for November, tells all about the life of the cadets at our Naval Academy at Annapolis,—their duties, their trials, and their pleasures,—and to read this paper, which is embelished with numerous and handsome illustrations, is quite equal to a visit to the Academy itself.

"Our National Nut" is a unique and interesting article. "Wedding and Engagement Rings" tells many peculiar facts and old legends about Rings ancient and modern, "Within Prison walls" is a pathetic story about Thanksgiving; "Cholly's Last Serenade" will be appreciated by all lovers of genuine humor; "Society Fads" gives the newest ideas about the training of children in fashionable society; the numerous departments are full to overflowing with timely matter; and the pictures are numerous and lovely, introduced by a colored panel-picture, "An American Beauty." $2.00 a year. W. JENNINGS DEMOREST, 15 E. 14th St., N. Y.

California Homes

A considerable portion of California is admirably adapted by nature for comfortable homes. There is perhaps no place in the world where a family of moderate means to begin with, and of industrious habits, can live so easily, enjoying not only the comforts but even the luxuries of life.

Instead of being, as many suppose, a place where only the wealthy can enjoy life, it is peculiarly adapted to homes of thrifty people who earn their daily bread, and while one without means would undoubtedly, find it very difficult to get a start, a man with a small capital can very soon surround himself with luxuries that only the wealthy can enjoy elsewhere.

A small tract of land (10 acres, or at most 20) is enough, which can be purchased at a reasonable price, if not in a "boom" district. With intelligence and industry used in planting and cultivating it, an income is certain. It should be part orchard and part vineyard. While the trees and vines are being brought into bearing enough to materially contribute to the maintenance of the family can be grown between the trees, and if the neighborhood has been well selected, every member of the family able and willing to work can find pleasant and remunerative labor in orchards and vineyards near by, and minister to the support of the family while acquiring the knowledge and skill necessary to the handling of their own crop.

The third year a considerable return may be expected from the vineyard, and from a part of the orchard. As the work has all been done within the family, this will be nearly all net income. The next year and thereafter there will be work enough, and returns enough on the home place.

Costly buildings are not necessary, for the climate is such that in much of the State life in the open air is entirely pleasant for 300 days in the year. In the Coast Range of mountains between San Francisco and Monterey, are many such homes. At first, they were made on the valley land on either side of the range. Year after year they have crept up into the little valleys between the spurs of the foot-hills, then on to the foot-hills, and in many places clear to the summits. All through they have found excellent soil, good pure water, and everywhere exceedingly healthful climate. Nestled in these little valleys are some of the most delightful places in the world. So mild is the climate that fuchsias and geraniums grow all winter and the family garden is planted in the fall, yielding good crops of peas, potatoes and any semi-hardy vegetables in February.

There is plenty of land, equally productive, now in the market and at low prices, and persons looking for a location for a comfortable home should not fail to visit this promising region.

The Santa Cruz Division of the Southern Pacific Company's Pacific System taps this range of mountains near the Southern extremity, its two long tunnels passing under the main range.

Beyond his worth was given

But men who deal in birds
Too often break their words
As easily as they would snap a finger.

A 4-5-6-7-bird

A phebe; 5-6-7 could not appall him,
But he is pretty, very,
And whimsically merry,
So 1-2-3-4-5-6-7 we call him.
