S. ELLIOTT SHANNAHAN, Local Reporter and Foreman.

Easton, Maryland, Saturday, Nov. 27, 1897.

TO-DAY the GAZETTE enters upon its 82d volume. We shall strive to keep it up to its standard of excellence and improve it as circumstances will warrant. To do this we need all the local support we can get.—There are many families who do not subscribe for the paper, but who are content with borrowing it. They console themselves that the same is issued primarily pro bono publico and that they owe it nothing. Such philosophy will kill any newspaper. It is only the public spirited people that are useful to a community. Those who live entirely within their own shells and absorb all they can get from their environments without giving or encouraging, cannot be said to have made the world better for having lived in it. Fair exchange is no robbery. We offer this paper to new subscribers until the end of 1898 for the sum of one dollar in advance.

Liberal inducements made to agents. Any active boy or girl can earn enough money to make all the Christmas presents he or she desires to, by writing to the editor of the GAZETTE how to do it.

THE most anoying and expensive feature of Court are the interminable cases of violation of the local option law. The expense to the county is increased year after year rather than lessened and the abuses of the law greater, if anything, and more flagrant as the years come and go. Some making a seeming practice of getting the "four months" in the House of Correction during the winter season. As to the "fine and costs" in addition, that never bothers them for they seldom have enough property to pay it.

If suggestions are in order, we think that a convict labor law on our roads and bridges would be better for the county than housing such persons within warm walls all winter. The violation of the law would then have some dread. Work is the greatest punishment the law can inflict upon such persons, and they are usually that class capable of enduring hard, rough labor.

Put them to road making and building bicycle paths and turn the expense they run the county to toward home improvements. This will work a double advantage and if it does not break up the violation of the law, the county will at least have some good results.

We have no doubt that within the years this local option law has been violated, there has been enough money expended to punish the violators to make the county roads the best in the State.

THE Baltimore News says: Wellington's interest in the Senatorship contest is keen enough now, however dormant it may have been during the campaign. Now is the time, not for influencing voters by argument of exhortation, but for manipulating legislators by promises of office. Now is the time, not for securing a representative of the party's principles in the Senate, but for selecting among those representatives the man whom it will best suit Wellington to have as his junior partner in the Senate. He will be live enough in that work. There will be arranged all the deals and dickers that can be managed between now and January. And if the Republican majority of the Legislature is so constituted that the Senatorship can be got in this way, the Lowndes-Wellington combination will name the United States Senator.

The people of Maryland will be completely disgusted by an exhibition of this kind. The intrinsic disgustingness of it will be heightened by its being engineered by a man of whom just now they are extremely tired. They are in no mood to look with any partiality upon anything Wellington may do, and if he tries to work a series of dickers for putting his man—whoever he might be—into the United States Senate, the outrageousness of the proceeding, taken in itself, will not be diminished in the minds of the people by the circumstance that the manager of it is the person who has had so disagreeable a prominence in the public eye during the past few months. As to Governor Lowndes himself, it is merely the plain truth to say that he has not the making of a United States Senator in him. He is an amiable and respectable gentleman, and he may have considerable ability in some directions; but he has no claim whatsoever to being made one of Maryland's two representatives in the most important legislative body in the world. The Republican party could do few things which would more surely or more deservedly sink it in the public esteem than to elect as a successor to Senator Gorman a man of small qualifications for the position as the result of flagrant course of bargain and sale applied to the State offices in his interest.

THE retiring Board of County Commissioners on last Tuesday left a beautiful statement of the County's finance for the succeeding Board. Full particulars are given in the news department of this paper. Under the Republican management of the past two years they hand over to their successors more than forty-four thousand dollars available assets as against twenty three thousand dollars they received from the preceding Democratic board at the time the administration changed hands.

This item was handed in for publication to one of the democratic papers which boasts of reporting all the news at all times. The editor refused to use it.

THE action of the School Board in granting a holiday yesterday, Friday following Thanksgiving, was commendable. Neither teachers nor pupils were in condition to do themselves justice.

DEPARTMENTAL TEACHING.

An Important Subject Now Widely Discussed by Prominen Educators of Maryland.

An account of the advantages of this system, which is under consideration before schoolmen at the present time, is given as follows by Mr. Albert J. Gminder, principal of English-German public school, in the Baltimore Sun.

Department teaching is once more up for consideration.—This system makes teachers specialists, teaching a few subjects in several classes in the place of class instructors, who teach all the prescribed subjects of a class year to one class exclusively. The idea is nothing new. It has been tried with varying success, under varying conditions and with varying approximations to exclusive departments. It has proved itself successful at home and abroad when tried in the proper spirit.

The extent of its introduction into any school must be govered by the special conditions existing therein. There are perhaps but few grammar schools in the city that can be made full fledged departmental schools. There are none that cannot, with advantage, place at least several subjects under the care of as many teachers and thus concentrate responsibility. The main limitations that confront the system are the number of teachers in a school and their aptitude. The latter defficiency can be overcome by the proper attitude. Just when to begin the system is hard to say, but it will probably be best to exclude, at least, the first two years of school life.

We have in our public schools three departments that are under departmental supervision to wit: Sewing, drawing and music. Of all these sewing stands first and foremost as purely departmental. If every subject taught in our common schools could show up as creditably in proportion to the time allotted to it, it were well.

Without any attempts at literary varnish, I will now try to cite some of the advantages of the departmental system:—There is no loss of time, no groping in the dark to find out just where to begin a scholastic year's work without loss of motion.

The defects of one year's teaching can be remedied in the next. The teacher is confronted with his own mistakes and shortcomings; he has a chance to correct them, and is thus enabled to improve. He must give up finding fault with the teacher of the preceeding grade. The teacher having fewer subjects to teach can prepare for them more thoroughly and can therefore draw from a wider range of experience. Departmental work limits and proportions co-ordination and subordinates it to the subject in hand as an auxiliary in the place of substituting it for the same. The teacher can watch more closely the growth and development of the children from year to year and can thus become more thoroughly acquainted with them and more int rested in their welfare.—Responsibility that lies virtually nowhere now will rest with the teacher of each department. What greater reward can a teacher find than the right to say with pride "That is my work?" The change of teachers is beneficial. One teacher is nervous and quick, another is phelegmatic, one is loud and noisy, another is sweet and subdued, one is jovial, another is solemn, and so contrasts move. What mature mind would like to sit under one lecturer for five hours?

The change is also beneficial to the teachers, for classes have their peculiar characteristics as well as teachers, and while a teacher goes to one class somewhat reluctantly, he goes to another with a change of relief. The time lost in changing teachers gives a few moments of absolute mental rest to both teacher and pupil. A child is not forced to remain under an unpopular teacher for a whole year. If the teacher be a poor one, the teacher propounds itself. Whether it is better to allow a year's gap in a child's life, on account of which both the child and the succeeding teachers must suffer in the years that follow, or to have one subject poorly treated and that where you can locate the defect by comparison with other methods?

The class reports both as to conduct and scholarship, and the annual promotions are not in the hands of one teacher, but depend upon a say so of all the teachers. Is not this fairer to the child, and does it not place the responisbility for success on the child beyond real or fictitious accusations of parents? In the case of substituting for absent teachers, which is preferable—one class upset for a whole day, or six or seven classes out of order and work for one period each during the da.? Departmental teaching holds down the schedule. Every subject receives its allotted time. If a mistake has been made in one year, or a class has been found particularly dull in some subject, this can be counteracted in the next year. It forecloses the possibilily of doing what is so often done—to take but fifteen minutes longer in a class that is already worn out on the subject, when it would have far better to have taken three-quarters of an hour at some other time. The earth has its years, its seasons, its moons, its days, its nights. We have our rising time, our meals, our work, our rest and recreations, our retiring time. Can we take a lesson?

The disadvantages alleged, real or apparent, are: Children have not one teacher to cling to. This is probably balanced by the fact that, while there are always some children who are general favorites and some to whom nobody seems to take, there are some, too, who will have a friend in one of the several teachers, even if they feel that they are not close to every teacher. Perhaps, as it is, there are many children who never learn to know that sunny seventh-grade teacher, and others who must part too soon from that fifth grade teacher, either of whose influence would have been worth a schoollife to have felt. Discipline is a little harder, and so it is for thos e who are not good disciplinarians. This may resolve itself, however into a secondary matter with the greater interest of a class in the instruction of a more thoroughly equipped teacher. The writer has found that the drawing teachers whom it has been his pleasure to meet are most excellent disciplinarians and fully able to shift for themselves. They know how to teach dra ing, they know it well that is all that is necessary.

One of the dreams that awaits materiliz tion with the more universal introduction of deppartmental teaching is great university of teachers, having, in the place of grade meetings, its college (not buildings) of history, its college of literature, its college af science where ability among them can rise and grow, receive recognition and extend a helping hand to the willing and less fortunately endowed; where men and women whose names stand as vouchers for the good work they have done, be they at home or abroad, can be invited or called to give the light of their research, the warmth of their personality, the force of their method.

If the average farmer did not enjoy his Thanksgiving turkey this year it was probably because he was too busy with prosperity which this first year of the McKinley administration has brought him. The official figures continue to show such prosperity as the farmer has not known for many years. The November exportation of wheat has been nearly fifty per cent. larger than during last year, and the shipments of last week from the Atlantic ports are the largest reported in any week for many years, if not at any time in the history of the country. The actual exports of wheat from all ports for the crop year thus far has been, in round numbers, a hundred million bushels. When the increase in prices is taken into consideration also it will be seen that the farmers are getting a very large sum of money for their wheat product this year—far in excess of that in many preceeding years. The exportations of corn are also increasing, those for the present month being nearly a million bushels in excess of November of last year.

And while the farmer has occasion to be thankful for his fortune in good crops and good prices, other citizens of the United States have occasion to be thankful to the farmer that his prosperity has brought prosperous conditions to others and to the country itself. The alarm which was felt at this season during those years in which gold was being drawn out of the country, and the government compelled to sell bonds to replenish the gold in the Treasury, no longer troubles the financiers or business men of the great cities, nor the administration. The fact that the farmers of the country have many millions of bushels of wheat to send abroad, for which gold is paid by the gold standard nations purchasing it, obviates the danger of reduction of the quantity of gold in the country, or of raids upon the gold in the treasury. Treasury officials say they are getting greater quantities of gold than they need or even than they desire, the gold reserve now reaching nearly $160,000,000, while the official figures showing the amount of gold in the United States and in circulation continue to indicate an increase, due doubtless to the fact that our exports are now largely in excess of our imports, which have fallen materially since the enactment of the new tariff law.
