EASTERN SHOREMAN AT MANILA.

His Thrilling Experiences in the Great Engagement.

The following letter from the pen of Lewis J. Wallace, a gunner's mate on the United States steamer Baltimore, tells his experience in the naval engagement at Manila. Mr. Wallace is a native of Fairmount, Somerset county, Md.

"I was in charge of the magazines in the forward part of the ship. The order came for four rounds of ammunition for each gun, which was sent in a hurry. When I went on deck, every gun was being loaded, and all as quiet as death. We had but one light on the ship that was showing, and were steaming about five knots an hour. As we approached the fort we expected a flash and report of a gun, but none came until we were well past, when a report came from the opposite shore, the shot passing over our stern and striking on our port side 150 yards away.

"The fire was, of course, returned, but no damage was done on either side. We were well up the bay and passed in about sunrise when we came in sight of the Spanish ships. It was a beautiful Sunday morning, and we could see them over by the navy yard, all ready for the fray. They had nine ships to our six. Three of our vessels took no part at all. We steamed within 4,000 yards, when a shell from of the Spanish vessels came whistling over the water, but passed over our bow.

"Then the signal from the flagship to commence firing was seen, and then such a report—you would have thought all the thunders in the world had started at the same time. Just then a small torpedo boat was seen coming in our direction. We trained our secondary battery on her, and when the smoke cleared away, she was seen to turn bottom up and go down with all hands; not one of them saved. The first broadside from our ships caused a terrible slaughter of the Spaniards. One large ship was seen to settle at the stern, her bow high in the air, and finally went under. About half an hour after the first shot was fired, the flagship was struck by one of our eight-inch shells and raked fore and aft, killing every man on her upper deck and knocking over two of her guns.

"In a few minutes a terrible explosion made the whole harbor shake, and a volume of smoke came from her stern. Her magazine was supposed to have exploded. She immediately caught fire, and the last we saw of her she was steaming in back of the breakwater. Friday she is an old hulk lying in the bottom of the harbor.

"Well, to make a long story short, the other eight followed her example, and are lying on the bottom of the harbor, some bottom up, and others with smokestacks just visible. It did not take half as long to blow the whole fleet up as it is taking me to tell it. The Spaniards managed to strike us five times, and the old Baltimore received the five. We had three men slightly wounded."

A little boy asked for a bottle of 'get up in the morning as fast as you 'an," the druggist recognized a household word and gave him a bottle of those famous little pills for constipation, sick headache, liver and stomach troubles. Harry Roberts.
