MARYLAND WILDLIFE

Prepared by the MARYLAND GAME & INLAND FISH COMMISSION

PINTAIL

(Anas acuta)

RANGE: A very widely distributed species from Alaska to Panama, on both coasts. Winters on the marshes and the waters of the Chesapeake Bay and tributaries in large numbers.

DESCRIPTION: One of the handsomest of our waterfowl; drake has long tail from which the species derives its name; head and throat olive brown, balance mostly black and white; female has less brilliant coloring but easily identified by broad, sharp pointed tail and long slender neck; the female is dusky under wing coverts. Length of male about 28 inches, female 22.

BREEDING: Mates early in spring; nests in grass near marsh and water, and lays from 5 to 12 greenish brown eggs; period of incubation about 22 to 23 days.

HABITS: A surface feeding duck and a fast flyer; shy; can spring into the air almost vertically similar to the black duck and mallard, whereas most of the diving ducks like redhead, canvasback and scaup must take off gradually and rise slowly like an airplane; can and occasionally does dive although classed among the nondiving waterfowl. Food is largely vegetable.

MANAGEMENT: Probably its numbers can be increased, or at least enable the species to hold its own, by wise marsh management, that is increase suitable areas where it can nest, rest and feed both in the United States and Canada.

VALUE: A valuable game bird providing sport to thousands of hunters and nature lovers in North America, also in Central America. It ranks high in food value.
