OVERNIGHT GUEST

By BEN AMES WILLIAMS

THE STORY THUS FAR: Adam Brent, the narrator, inspector here and Mrs. Ives met in the Ivory saloon. They found a man murdered in one room operated by Ina Dennis. He was believed to be Mr. Lockyer, head of that finished utilities. Lockyer's friend was found in bonnet with two bullets in his shoulder. Both men seemed dead to the hotel-keeper on hand, were Dodson's orders. And in the last room were Mrs. Ives and Ina Dennis, partners in a business with Dodson and Brent room bookkeeper. FURY that a woman and man had been there at time of murder and the door was locked from, which might have been Lockyer, as the name was Burke.

CHAPTER X

He admitted. "Matter of fact, I thought there was two women in there. I thought she said 'Ruth,' all that here told me it was a man and a woman."

Joe took both men in his car back to his home in North Madison. Here were vital witnesses; he meant to keep their observations to himself for a while.

"And you stay here," he directed. "Don't talk to anybody till I come for you, or send for you, See?"

He went back to the courthouse, where Pringle still held his right over Holdrich. "He's been asleep most of the time," the detective reported. "Seems kind of dopey. Don't say a word."

Joe nodded. "I've got a hot trail," he reported. "Have you heard anything from Mott?"

"Why, yes," Pringle told him. "They got that car out of the quarry. Telephoned for Will Rankin's ambulance here a minute ago. Mrs. Kell was in it. Dead."

Joe nodded again, lightly. "Wheatley," he agreed. "Well, I'll run out there, take charge."

He made speed toward the quarry. Beyond Dennis's Mill, to the Bend east of a car stopped at a filling-station there, he saw Tope sitting alone, his head bowed, superintendent asleep. But Joe did not stop. He had no desire to share with this individual his discoveries now.

Instructor Tope did not see Joe Dene pass by, but the old man, though his eyes were closed, was not asleep. Not he might have been exhausted by being. He had slept out at all for many hours.

When Ben, the night before, took Mrs. Tope away to see her safe shed, Tope bid Adam up to the cabin where Whitlock and Beal were housed, and finished on the floor. Whitlock and Beal were still awake.

"I talked with your boss, boys," Tope told them directly. "Take out word for that? Or do you want to get him on the phone?"

Whitlock conferred Beal with a glance, and Tope added: "I know who got you on this. Charley told me. He said you don't know."

"No," Whitlock admitted.

"Charley gave me your reports up to yesterday morning, the last time you called him up. I'll run through them if you want, show you I know what I'm talking about."

Whitlock surrendered. "We'll take your word for it," he said.

Tope nodded. "All right. But the party that got you on the job to the first place says you can quit now. But I need you, and Myers says you're to work with me. O.K.?"

Whitlock grinned. "I've heard a lot about you, old man. Glad to watch you operate. What is this business, anyway?"

Tope for a moment did not answer. Then he said heavily, "It's all to myself. "If it's what I think it is, it's about as bad a thing as I ever ran into." And he added grimly, "Unless I'm clear off the track, there are three people dead already —and if we don't watch ourselves, there be more. Two boys more sure."

They set out in two cars, Whitlock and his concrete-testing; and Tope said to Adam:

"Go in that lodge, son. I want to see Mr. Eberly."

Adam assented. "Hurry?" he asked.

Tope shook his head. "It's late already," he pointed out. "We'll be asleep anyway. We'll have to wake him up, and we're staying with him all night, so take your time."

"Right," Adam assented. "See if you can go to sleep. I'll try not to give you a bumpy ride."

Yet with the best of intentions on Adam's part, that drive through the night was also an ordeal of nerves. Bad weeds roads, missed turns and unexpected doublings and difficulties. It was past four o'clock in the morning, and Adam was grimly cursing Ben Dennis's idea of direction before they came at last to a gate she had described—and found it locked. At Tope's direction, Whitlock and Beal stayed here with the cars while Tope and Adam went on, trudging along the winding way. Impending a gray light came stealing through the wood.

Daylight," said Tope. "Well, we're time enough!" And he asked: "Adam, got your gun?"

"Yes. Why?"

"Well may have brought some one up here than he didn't tell us about," said Tope, and said no more. Then they came to the lodge—low, sprawling, built of logs, with an outlook to the lake among the hundred cranes of distant wooded hills like looming fifties. A car was parked by the door; and door, and some windows, were open.

Mr. Eberly came out to meet them, and remembered Adam, and said genially: "I heard your car. Sorry the gate was locked." He smiled in kind, mutilous fashion. "More trouble, Tope?"

"Not for you, sir," Adam told him; and he introduced Inspector Tope, saying I to Tope to explain their presence here.

Tope looked Eberly that letter from Ledlarge. "Miss Dennis thought you'd want it," he said. "As long as it's mis afternoon Mr. Ledlarge would you to meet him."

Eberly read the letter swiftly; he looked at Tope. "Miss Dennis showed this to you?"

"Yes sir," Tope confessed; and he said bitterly: "Mr. Eberly, I don't want to try to tell you all that's happened. If I told you the story, you'd think more about the questions you want to ask than about the questions I'm asking you. Mind if I don't start explaining at all?"

Eberly was white and still. "What is it you want of know?"

"Why, that's fine," said Tope unbelievably. "You know Mr. Ledlarge pretty well, don't you?"

"I've probably his most intimate friend." Eberly glanced at Adam.

"He will be here some time today."

"Mr. Brown has of course told you of the bank's collapse. Ledlarge securities were in large part responsible. But Mr. Ledlarge had all—and more than—the money on hand of his staff. He believed in it himself, but professed that I should not commit the bank to liquidity. It was my decision, my own responsibility."

Tope nodded. "Knew his family, do you?"

"Mrs. Ledlarge, yes. There is no son also."

"You and he used to go fishing together and so on?"

"Yes, and still do. Fish and hunt. Or sometimes just come up here and rest for days on end."

Tope looked around reflectively. And he asked: "Mr. Eberly, come down in Ledlarge's place with us, will you? I want to see Miss Ledlarge, and I'd like to see that letter of his. I'm a fisherman myself."

"Certainly," Eberly agreed. "I'll get some clothes on." He had come in slippers and dressing-gown to greet them.

At Tope's suggestion, they left Eberly's car here and walked back to the locked gate, crossed Whitlock and Beal, sleeping wearily in their cars, and set off under way. They told them they need not go through Shipwreck.

"There's a back road," he explained, "that comes down past the fish pond. A locked gate, but I have a key."

When their ring was answered, Tope asked for Mr. Ledlarge.

"He's asleep, this afternoon, sir," the servant replied.

"Then Miss Ledlarge?"

Miss Ledlarge received them at the gun-room table; and Adam thought there was some shadow in her eyes; yet she smiled in a friendly fashion, and spoke to Eberly. Tope, remembering his call two days before.

"My brother hasn't come yet," she explained. "He will be here sometime today."

Tope said slowly: "Why, that's what I hear, Miss Ledlarge." And he said: "We're from the Myers Agency, you see."

Her cheek colored faintly. "Oh, that absurd proceeding!" she exclaimed. "I should apologize for troubling you." And she explained: "It was one ridiculous accident. You see, my brother were last week that he was ill, was coming home Friday." She hesitated. "To never look proper care of himself; and when he didn't come as he expected, I was concerned." She laughed softly. "He was so amused, when I told him what I had done. You see he—cut off my finger. So I telephoned Mr. Myers."

Adam saw Whitlock move as though to speak, knew what the officer was about to say. It was early Friday morning, before she could have known that her brother had not come home as he planned, that Miss Ledlarge had set done men upon the trail. But Tope touched Whitlock's arm, restraining him; spoke himself instead.

"Well, ma'am, that's all right." And he added: "I want to leave Mr. Whitlock here. He's expecting a phone call from Mr. Myers. Can he stay?"

"Of course," she assured him; and then Tope was saying good-by.

Outside, the old man said roughly: "Whitlock, you and Beal stay here till you hear from me." And he added: "Your job is to see that nothing happens to that old lady."

"Happens to her? What—"

"I don't look for anything," Tope admitted. "Your being here will prevent. But—you stay."

And he turned and with Adam by his side struts toward the car. Whitlock, gaping with bewilderment, swung away to where Beal waited in the other machine.

At the Mill, Ben and Mrs. Tope were here to greet them. After the first moment, Ben caught Adam's arm, drew him aside.

"What's happened?" she demanded softly. "Where have you been?"

"Lost in an impenetrable forest," he assured her, chuckling. "When it comes to giving a man directions, you're a total loss. What were you trying to do, get rid of us for good and all? We didn't find the lodge till daylight."

"Ideal" she protested. "You didn't leave! But it's hours since daylight. Where have you been since? And why did he bring Mr. Eberly here? And what did you find out?"

"Well," he said, "we called on Miss Ledlarge. It was she who put Whitlock and Beal on this thing, because her brother wrote her that he was sick."

"But that doesn't make sense—" She had no time to shape another question. Tope was coming toward them, and he called to Adam:

"All right, son! Let's go!"

He climbed into the car. "Where to?" Adam asked, and Tope said in a mild impatience:

"The quarry, road!"

So Adam drove down the road toward Edgecomb, till he came to that byway which led up into the hills where the quarries were; then turned aside and began the steep climb.

Adam asked: "You told sure this is the Holden car?"

But Tope reported in an impatient tone: "It's bound to be! Go along."

When they reached the ledge above the quarry, Nat Cumberland came to meet them; greeted Adam, now half a dozen men engaged in the task here under way. Cumberland said in dour bewilderment then:

"Tope, Kell told the truth. Our dead man can't be Ledlarge! There's a story in the New York papers today that Ledlarge has made a composition in the governing committee of the Stock Exchange about 10:30 am."

"So, Ledlarge isn't dead," Tope absently asserted.

Adam groaned closer, so intent as the District Attorney to hear what the old man's answer would be; but Tope gave them no enlightenment. "It's time a lot more two hours from now," he said. "But till I'm sure in my own mind, I'd rather not do any guessing." And he added reassuringly: "But Mac, if I'm on the right track, we'll have all the dirty work washed and hung out on the line by tonight." He took the big man's arm. "Now come on. Let's see what they're doing here."

They turned along the ledge and Cumberland said: "The newspapers have got the story, Tope. Got reporters on it. I talked for some of them to to up here before now."

Tope stopped in his tracks. "We don't want that! Quill here?"

"Over yonder," Cumberland assented; and Tope saw the trooper, kneeling on the lip of the ledge to look down into the quarry pit below, and called to him. Quill came toward them; and Tope said quickly:

"Son, go down the road and keep the reporters from coming up here —if they find out where we are."

"Uh," Quill assented. "I ran into them once already today." And he reported: "I found the Holden fellow, Inspector. Brother pitcher gone, but it's the one, all right. Hid in the woods. There's blood on the floor, rug in the rear seat." He chuckled. "I sent the reporters up there. They couldn't make anything out of that."

Tope nodded. "You looked it over first?"

"Nothing in it."

"Look at the tank?"

"No. Why?"

Tope said: "There was probably blood and hair on one of the screwdrivers. Unless Holden kept his hat on. But no matter. Did you see the girl? I sent you to see?"

"Did yet. Tried twice, but Bess wasn't anyone at home."

"Well, after we're through here, find her, see what she says, come and tell me." The old man chuckled. "Think you can hold the reporters off our neck?"

(TO BE CONTINUED)

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL

SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

By HAROLD L. HENDERSON, D. D.
Of the Bible Study Staff of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.
Released by Western Newspaper Union.

Lesson for February 3

Lesson subjects and titles are copyrighted by International Council of Religious Education; used by permission.

FEAST DAYS OF A PEOPLE

LESSON TEXT—Leviticus 23:1, 2, 10-14, 21, 22, 24, 27, 28, 34-36, 39-43.
GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord hath made known his salvation: his righteousness hath he openly showed in the sight of the heathen.—Psalm 98:2.

God wants His people to enjoy their religious life. Being in fellowship with Him is not something to dampen one's spirits, but rather to give joy and enthusiasm full liberty. Even with Israel in those early days when Christ had not come and they had only the promises and types of His coming, He arranged for regular religious feasts or festivals which brought the people together to worship Him.

One can well imagine the delightful fellowship as friends, acquaintances and especially relatives from various places went up to the feast together. Personal joy was heightened by the great spiritual joy which they shared.

The obvious lesson for us is that we who have Christ and have peace and liberty in Him should enjoy our Christian experience to the full in a manner well-pleasing to Him. We need such occasions to renew our faith, to quicken our joy, and to cause us to remember God's grace and His blessings.

The first of the assigned Scripture passages does not directly relate to the feasts of God's people but rather spoke of—

I. The Holiness of the Lord (Lev. 23:1, 2).

God is holy and His people in their earthly walk are to show that they have been sanctified by Him. This involves a separation from worldly practices and an eagerness to do the will of God.

Keeping the statutes of God should be the delight of His people, not a burden or a trial. There is real liberty in conformity to intelligent rules for freedom and fruitfulness.

Now we turn to the consideration of the feasts of the Lord. In selecting the verses, two of the feasts were omitted, as we shall include Leviticus 23:3, 9-21 with the others assigned.

II. The Feasts of the Lord (Lev. 23:3-6, 9-13, 15, 16, 24, 27, 28, 34, 35-43).

This is one of the great chapters of the book of Leviticus, presenting both practical and prophetic teaching. The holy "feasts" and the "set times" of Israel (which we shall consider under the one heading of "feasts") were for their spiritual instruction and edification, but they also looked God's gracious purpose for both Israel and the Church.

1. The Sabbath (v. 3). This is not primarily considered one of the feasts but a set time—a holy convocation to be held after six days of labor. It is the type of the rest that God has in mind for His people. (See Heb. 4:1-11.)

A word of admonition is in order regarding America's sinful disregard for and misuse of our day of rest—the Lord's day. Is it not time we did something about the desecration of Sunday?

2. The Passover and the Unleavened Bread (vv. 4-8). These could be considered separately but they are closely related. The Passover speaks of the Lamb of God who was to shed His blood on the cross, even as it pointed back to redemption by blood on that dark night in Egypt (Exod. 12:12, 13).

The unleavened bread speaks of holiness. This is not the result of "servile work" (v. 8), but a showing forth of faith in the offering to die.

3. The Firstfruits (vv. 9-14). Just as the ox stood was waved before the Lord as the earnest of the harvest, so Christ in His resurrection is the firstfruits of them that sleep in the grave. (See 1 Cor. 15:20-23.) Note that it was waved "on the morrow after the Sabbath" (v. 11) which is the resurrection morning—our Sunday. What a blessed thought!

4. Pentecost (vv. 15, 16). Fifty days after the feast of firstfruits came a new meal offering; two wave loaves are presented before the Lord. This new meal offering speaks of the believing people of Christ, and as it came to pass that it was on Pentecost that the Holy Spirit was poured out on the Church (Acts 2:1-4), just fifty days after the resurrection of Christ.

5. Trumpets (v. 24). This looks forward to the day when God shall call His people Israel in the latter days. This will bring them together for the great day of

6. Atonement (vv. 27, 28). On that day Christ shall take away the sin of His people (Zech. 12:10, and they shall be prepared for the crowning and joyous feast of

7. Tabernacles (vv. 34, 35-44). This was the great feast of ingathering of the products of the year. Israel then dwelt in booths or small dwellings in the wilderness. It was a time of full rejoicing, when anyone and crying were put away. It is the type of Israel's ultimate restoration and full blessing.

Trust you the hands of the Lord—delightful and faith-stimulating—for Israel and for us!

SEWING CIRCLE NEEDLEWORK

Crochet These Glamour Gloves Warm, Brightly Colored Slippers

Crocheted Gloves.

GLAMOUR gloves for extra special occasions! Crocheted of black wool and sprinkled up with multicolored sequins sewn in the meshes of the brilliantly colored tiny wool flowers. You'll need black wool, a few lengths of colored wools, a few yards of sequins from the five-and-dime.

* * *

To obtain complete crocheting instructions for the Crocheted Gloves (Pattern No. 5837) and Slippers (Pattern No. 5455) send 15 cents in coin, your name, address and pattern number.

Bedroom Slippers.

GAY little bedroom slippers that look like Cossack boots. Warm as toast. It takes 2 balls of plain or other brightly colored wools cup yarn for the thick soles—2 ounces of green or your favorite color for the cuff and vamp uppers. Pretty as can be and a grand gift idea!

* * *

To obtain complete crocheting instructions for the Knit Sheet Rose (Pattern No. 5455) send 15 cents in coin, your name, address and pattern number.

Address SEWING CIRCLE NEEDLEWORK
570 Lexington Ave., New York, N. Y.
Enclose 15 cents for Pattern.
No. ____
Name ____
Address ____

Enclose 15 cents in coin for each complete pattern desired. Write your name and address clearly. Please specify the number of each pattern desired.

Send your order to—

Yours FOR BETTER BAKING

Bring your favorite recipes right to store by comparing them with the book recipes contained in

TODAY'S BAKINGWAYS

Your name and address on a post card will bring you the new baking guide plus a copy of The Clabber Girl Baking Book, both free.

ADDRESS
HULMAN & COMPANY
Dept. W Terre Haute, Indiana

CLABBER GIRL Baking Powder

Household Hints

Soak such things as grocery scrubs in a good soap solution and thereby make it easier for the washer to do its job.

—o—

Put ground allspice, cloves, mace and nutmeg in shakers on the table and let the folks choose their own spices to their desserts.

—o—

Place a piece of wax paper directly beneath the dessert scarf. Then should you spill perfume—nothing serious.

—o—

To keep suede or kid gloves in good condition in a damp climate, put them in a dry season jar and seal.

