

entirement well, for they have placed on the papal throne a man who, unless he should change the policy which has marked his career as priest, bishop and cardinal, will not only carry forward the work of his venerated predecessor, but will broaden its lines and extend its sphere by even a greater liberality in dealing with those problems which have endangered the advance of the church in more than one of the nations of the world. It required seven ballots to reach this choice. Though the name of Cardinal Sartò had been put forward among the possibilities, yet there were few predictions that the white tiara would be placed upon his head. The cardinals, in their wisdom, seemed to have decided to lay aside all those who were counted the leading candidates: Cardinals Gotti, Oreglia, Serafino Vannutelli and Rampolla. Pope Pius X takes his seat at the same age as did his predecessor, and though now nearly three score years and ten, has sturdy health, which gives promise of a long reign.

The Maryland campaign this year is a prelude to the larger struggle in the national field in 1904. At the present time the name of Senator Arthur P. Gorman looms up as the most probable nominee of the Democracy for the Presidency. A recent poll of the Georgia legislature shows that its members are almost overwhelmingly in favor of the distinguished Marylander in spite of the fact that Judge Parker, of New York, recently visited the state and made a public address. A poll of the state's congressional delegation likewise shows that seven out of eleven members favor Mr. Gorman, and with those who prefer another nominee, Mr. Gorman is almost invariably the second choice. What is true of Georgia is largely true of the Northern states, and it would not be surprising to see the "solid South" in line for Mr. Gorman, while the North and West, attracted by his conservative record, would furnish the votes to make up the two-thirds necessary for his election.

With this probability in view it is not unlikely that this year's campaign will be watched with unusual interest by the country at large, and that national forces may participate in the battle, the Republicans in the hope of crippling their most formidable adversary and the Democrats with the view of strengthening him for next year's contest.

In the more than one hundred years of national life, Maryland has never furnished the country with a President. It would be a proud thing for her in the first election of the twentieth century to accomplish such a result in the person of Mr. Gorman.
