The Maryland Legislature finds it necessary to raise more money for the State's expenses and obligations. The members have a disagreeable duty to perform. The people are demanding more and more from the State and local governments, but are unwilling to pay the taxes necessary to provide what they demand. Any proposed tax will meet the opposition of the class it most seriously affects. Why not lay the tax so that every body will pay according to his means. The nearest method for accomplishing such a result would be a sales tax, under which every one would pay in proportion to his purchases.

The floods of the Ohio Valley have wrought heavy damage to a large area of the States along the Ohio river. It is estimated that nearly a million citizens were forced from their homes, losing all but their lives. When we think of what would happen in our Southern Maryland should our river rise sixty feet above normal level, we can get an idea of what has happened in a territory of many thousands of square miles with large cities and towns. The resources of many States have been taxed to move the flood victims to places of safety and care for them with food and shelter.

To the radio, the American Red Cross, the railroads and the concerted efforts of the people in the stricken communities and throughout the land it is due that so many could be saved from destruction.

Forest Service Telephones Increased By CCC Workers

CCC workers splicing a telephone wire in the Monongahela National Forest. (Right) A patrolman with a portable telephone taps on a forest service line to report a fire just beginning. Forest Service Photos

Telephones in the forest are a great shotor in caring for babes in the woods and older people as well. Toward this end the Forest Service is constantly adding telephone lines and instruments to its communication system as a more efficient means of providing quick protection in case of fire and other emergencies, according to Charles K. Randall, acting chief, division of information and education of Forest Service at Washington, D. C.

Forest service in the various sections of the United States maintains recreation camps and sites for the pleasure of the citizens of the country, provides grazing lands for stock and promotes the growth of young timber for the use of future generations. In the protection of these forests the department now operates about 40,000 miles of telephone line as compared with 41,700 in 1932.

Civilian Conservation Corps workers who have been so helpful in the protection of the forests of the country have added about 25,000 miles of new telephone lines in the forest service system in the past three years and have reconstructed and improved thousands of miles of existing lines.

Forest service communications engineers have for several years been building a well conceived and ultimate telephone system. The objective of the forest service plan is to provide adequate and dependable communication between protective stations, ranger districts and supervisors' headquarters, second-line supply bases, and other points designated as necessary to provide proper fire control and administration of the unit with the minimum of telephone line mileage and annual maintenance. The plan is simple, easily prepared, and readily understood and accepted by the field men. It was built up on a ranger district basis and the lines were laid out on the assumption that all points in the district should report directly to the ranger.

Elimination so far as possible of switching stations in the forests requiring operators, the weighing of cooperative use of commercial lines and the determination of the number of telephones for each line will be factors in the ultimate forest service system. The maximum length of circuits was determined by the number of telephone connections and the volume of traffic. For example, a single telephone line in one of the national forests is more than 100 miles in length and has 18 telephones connected with it, the service being very satisfactory. There are other lines about half this length with about one dozen telephone lines each, over which slor service is experienced at times. In certain areas static and electrical discharges must be considered in the operation of the lines. In some localities because of earth currents, grounded lines are not practical.

Telephone lines in national forests are plotted on all district maps for regional office and local use. Where this planned telephone system has been installed, it has resulted in economy and greater efficiency in the construction and operation of the telephone lines and an increasing gain in protection of life and property.

Pennsy R. R. Safeguarded By Telephone Dispatching

Dispatchers talking with each other by telephone across the miles separating the cities at passengers. For convenience they wear headsets just like telephone operators.

Telephones serving the Pennsylvania Railroad would take care of the requirements of a city of approximately two million population. This modern railroad utilizes more than 200,000 miles of wire circuits in its communication system. Today 96 per cent of the railroad's dispatching system is telephone operated. At the present time more than 150,000,000 calls are made annually through the 22,000 telephones in service, according to officials of the company.

Electrical communication contributes much to the safety of railway travel. Use of the telephone in dispatching trains, transmitting reports and business messages between regional and divisional headquarters, inquiries about trains arriving and leaving, purchase of tickets and Pullman reservations, and hundreds of other activities call for almost constant use of telephone communication.

This railroad also utilizes teletypewriters, telautograph, telephone selectors for train dispatching and message circuits, and loading coils for cable and telephone repeaters on long distance lines.

Correct time is essential to modern railroading. To insure that all clocks serving the Pennsylvania Railroad are accurate, time signals from the United States Naval Observatory at Washington, D. C., are sent out over the system twice daily. Special wire circuits augment the regular train and message circuits for this time signal service.

Special telephone equipment serves the larger railroad stations to furnish information to the public regarding passenger train service including the arrival and departure of trains, train connections, through service over foreign lines, rates for transportation, and other informational services. Public telephones operated by commercial agencies serve the larger of the Pennsylvania's stations.

TELLING THE WORLD

Topeka . . . Every day for twenty-five years, Fred Hess, head timekeeper at a railway shop in Topeka, Kansas, talked by telephone with C. H. Berenius, payroll clerk. Then, on the silver anniversary of his employment, Mr. Hess visited the railway offices a mile away for the first time and was introduced to Mr. Berenius. "Why walk when you can telephone?" asks Mr. Hess.

Havana . . . Telephone installations showed substantial increases with 57,942 telephones in operation at the end of 1935 as compared with 51,650 the previous year, Assistant Commercial Attache Charles H. Decoteau, of the U. S. Department of Commerce, reported. Long distance telephone service between Havana and the United States was inaugurated April 11, 1921, through deep-sea cables. With the establishment of telephone service to foreign countries, Havana became a part of this international network.

Johannesburg . . . Improvements to the telephone system serving Johannesburg, South Africa, and vicinity, including the conversion of the telephone plant to dial operation, are under way and according to present plans dial exchanges will be in operation throughout this section by the end of 1939.

South Africa is now served by about 127,000 telephones. Telephones in the Union of South Africa became available for connection with the international telephone network, including the United States, Canada, Cuba and Mexico, June 1, 1932.

Seoul . . . Shortage of telephones and equipment in Korea has made it necessary for prospective subscribers to buy a number from present subscribers, the prices from time to time ranging between 900 and 1,200 yen. The annual rental for a telephone in Seoul is 108 yen. Telephones have been operated in Korea for about forty years and from the latest figures supplied by the United States Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce there are now about 40,000 telephones as compared with 6,500 in 1910.

WORLD TELEPHONE NEWS EXCHANGES

St. Louis . . . An incoming telephone call came to the Coca-Cola Bottling Works here recently at an opportune time. A bandit who was holding up the office had secured $92 from the cash register when he noticed the safe and ordered the general manager to open it. While the official was kneeling before the safe, operating the dial, with the bandit standing behind him with a drawn revolver, the telephone rang. The bandit, hearing the bell, turned and left on the run.

Copenhagen . . . Dansk Telefonaktieselskab—the Jutland Telephone Companies—have recently installed an underground telephone cable between Aarhus and Viborg, Denmark. Denmark is now served by about 365,000 telephones. This is equivalent to about ten telephones for each one hundred of the country's population. Telephones in Denmark were made available for the international network with the establishment of service to Copenhagen from the United States, June 29, 1928.

Hollywood . . . Long distance may make the heart grow fonder, but Ethel Merman, featured in "Anything Goes" utilized probably one of the shortest telephone lines in existence in the production of this film. Only fifty feet of wire were necessary to connect the two telephones used in the production. Miss Merman, featured in the picture with Bing Crosby, sits in a hoop of neon lights and "floats" over the heads of people in a night club. In making the film an operator with a telephone, seated on the floor of the cafe was connected with another operator located in the attic of the building completely out of sight. The floor man telephoned the upper operator, directing him where to swing the crane which placed Miss Merman properly throughout the scene. However, this was not the shortest telephone line ever used, for it was twenty feet longer than that of the original line over which Alexander Graham Bell, the inventor, and Thomas A. Watson, his assistant, held the first telephone conversation in the world, March 10, 1876.
