CHESTERTOWN, MD.,

Kent County Rail Road.

At the regular Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Kent County Rail Company, held last Monday, all the old officers were re-elected by decided majorities. There was no effective or strong opposition—the highest of the new candidates receiving only 900 shares of Stock out of an aggregate number of 3000. The Board now stands—

President—George Vickers.

Directors—Isaac Parsons, T. W. Eliason, William T. Spry, D. C. Blackiston, Charles Beaston, T. J. Shalloross, Wm. B. Wilmer.

Secretary and Treasurer—R. Hynson.

It is understood that the permanent location of the route will be at once effected.

[COMMUNICATED.]

Editor Transcript: As Base Ball claims much attention at present from the public generally, I have thought it might not prove altogether uninteresting to give, through your columns, a slight description of the game played at the College Grounds on the 11th inst.

I will speak of the contest as it appeared from the stand-point I occupied—that of an unbiassed citizen, and one who understood none of the various rules which govern or affect the game.

The Clubs engaged were the "Wissahicon," commanded by Capt. Wirt, composed, with two exceptions, of young men from Washington College, and the "Kent," commanded by Capt. Dyer, composed of young men from Galena.

About 2½ P. M., the contest began, and much interest was apparent in many of the by-standers; some confidently asserting the superiority of one Club, some equally impressed with the superiority of the other; for though the Wissahicon consisted of very young men, and were opposed to a Club that had never known defeat, and whose members were both older and more experienced; yet they were animated by all the zeal which a determined resolve on victory can impart.

But the Kent appeared equally enthusiastic, and it soon became evident that it was a very doubtful matter on which side victory would culminate: the admirable precision with which either side "caught," the surprising agility displayed by many of the members, and the unabated ardor with which all persisted, convinced every one that the side beating would have but little to brag of.

About the seventh inning it was thought the Wissahicon would be victorious, and much glee was manifested by the friends of the Club. The excitement now ran very high, for many thought it impossible for such to be the case, the known skill of the opposing Club, and the invariable success which had hitherto attended them, warranted, almost, the belief.

And such was the fact. The Captain of the Wissahicon had his finger bursted by the ball, which accident was a serious drawback to success: the efforts of the Kent appeared to be redoubled, and finally victory declared in their favor.

It was a closely contested game, nor, in my opinion, have the vanquished much cause for despondency; 23 were scored by the Kent, 21 by the Wissahicon. The Kent, I understand, has but once before played with such slight odds, and then the scores were higher.

Thus the game ended. Three cheers were then given by the Wissahicon in honor of their opponent's success; and three by the Kent, as tokens of appreciation of the skill of the Wissahicon; after which three cheers were proposed for the Umpire, Wm. Houston, as testamentary of the handsome manner in which he had performed his trust.

Now I come to a part of the day's proceedings concerning which I can speak as a participant, and, probably, as an able participant. I allude to the sumptuous collation provided, for the opposite Club, by the Wissahicon: their defeat certainly did not prevent them from performing the part of hospitable and attentive hosts: perhaps, the supper was a greater success on that account, for surely the guest who has just been beaten can derive but little gratification at the banquet of his conqueror; yet he must have been a badly beaten victim who, if his inner man was at all solicitous, would not have obtained comfort and spirits from the bountiful board spread by the Wissahicon. Looking at Base Ball, I know, gives a man an appetite; playing, no doubt, has a like tendency to a greater degree.

Thus after partaking of all the delicacies of the season, prepared in the most persuasive style, the Clubs amicably separated. May they flourish ever!

Release of Jefferson Davis on Bail.

After two weary years of imprisonment in a fortress—on what particular charge has never been told—Jefferson Davis has at length been released from military custody, and remanded to the civil authority, to be tried on an indictment for treason. This indictment, found not till a year or more subsequent to the commencement of his incarceration, has been pending for many months. Why, then, this transfer was not long ago made, why the right to a speedy trial should have been so long entirely disregarded in his case, it would be difficult to say. The only apparent reason has been the absence, in some quarter or other, and in various quarters, perhaps, of the requisite courage and purpose to a simple duty in behalf of the prisoner, the constitution and the laws. For an indefinite period he rested under the blackest of accusations, that of plotting assassination; but it has fallen away from him, though in an informal manner, and the perjury which was arrayed against him, as well as others, on that charge, has been exposed.

Now, having outlived that accusation, he comes at last before a civil court for the trial which he has been long demanding. The telegraph gives the preliminary proceedings in the case at Richmond yesterday, which show that Mr. Davis was brought before the United State Court on a writ of habeas corpus, discharged thereon, rearrested on a bench warrant to answer the Norfolk indictment for treason, and then admitted to bail in the sum of 100,000 to appear at the November term of court. His sureties are Mr. Horace Greeley and Mr. Schell, of New York; Mr. Jackmann, of Philadelphia, and some Virginia gentlemen, Judge Underwood requiring that one-half the bail should be given by persons residing in Virginia.

So Mr. Davis still has to wait till November for trial, unless the indictment in the meantime be quashed. If tried under the treason punishing and confiscation act of Congress of 1862, the court has the discretion, if the accused is convicted of treason, to mete out the punishment, in lieu of death, of a five years' imprisonment and a fine of ten thousand dollars; and if tried for rebellion and convicted, the penalty of ten years' imprisonment or a fine of ten thousand dollars, with the forfeiture forever of the privilege of holding office under the United States.—Balto. Sun of Tuesday.

Interesting Meeting in Richmond---Addresses by Messrs. Greeley and Gerrit Smith.

RICHMOND, May 14.—Horace Greeley and Gerrit Smith, who came here to go on Mr. Davis's bail-bond, addressed a dense meeting at the African Church to-night, composed about equally of whites and blacks. An assemblage nearly as large was also gathered outside the building.—Judge Pierpont was on the stand.

Mr. Greeley explained the obstructions that had impeeded reconstruction, beginning with the assassination of President Lincoln, and coming down to President Johnson's policy. The obstcale now was the unwillingness of the people to give the negro any rights they were not obliged to. The South had the opportunity given it by Congress to give these rights itself, but refused to do it.

Upon the subject of confiscation he was emphatic, urging the negroes not to look forward to acquiring lands in that way.—He wished to see them own farms, but they must work for them, and they need not expect to get them any other way.

Gerrit Smith followed in a short address. He said the South was not alone to blame for the war, which had been brought on by the North, which had supported slavery, its immediate cause.

It had supported slavery because it had profited by it. It had drawn the milk while the South held the cow. He strongly opposed confiscation, and told the negroes not to look forward to anything that was so hopeless. Speaking of the rumors of riot he had heard since arriving here, he urged the negroes not to give way to lawlessness, and to avoid any approach to riotous conduct.

Judge Underwood, who was cheered and hissed when he came forward, made a short address.

After hearing one or two other speakers, the meeting adjourned.

Release of Jefferson Davis.

The release of Mr. Jefferson Davis on $100,000 bail to appear for trial in November next excites considerable comment on the part of the press.

From the New York Tribune.

Jefferson Davis has been released, and it will suggest comment upon the past action of the government that his release has been effected without the slightest trouble. Between the military and the civil authoriites there was no conflict, no hesitation on the part of the court in admitting him to bail, and no difficulty in obtaining, even from his extreme opponents, the amount of bail required. All that was necessary was the production of the prisoner in a civil court of the United States. The rest followed as a matter of course. Thus easily has been solved one of the most vexations questions which the blunders of the government have raised since the close of the war; and thus at last we are relieved of the disgrace of keeping in confinement a man accused of great crimes, for which we were afraid or unable to try him.

All this might have been effected months ago, by a very little courage and good sense. It was as easy last summer as now. To advance toward some difficulties is to overcome them, and this is a signal example. The government had absolutely no excuse for the long imprisonment of Jefferson Davis, and its refusal to either release or try him. We affirmed this a year ago, and that we were right was proved yesterday, when, after the brief remarks of the counsel, and a few legal forms, Mr. Davis was discharged by the court. He is now at liberty to go where he pleases; and not at the South alone, but equally at the North, his liberation will be hailed as a victory of common sense.
