POOR.

What! poor, you say? Why, save you, friend,
I've more than half the world can show;
Such wealth as mine you cannot boast,
Such bliss as mine you cannot know.
I've more than keenest head can sum—
Could ever dream of, night or day;
I've treasures hid from sordid hearts,
No cunning thief can take away.

My riches never bring distrust
Between me and my fellow-men;
No evil passion stirs my breast,
To yield me hate for hate again.
But pleasure, peace, and joy they bring;
They soothe my cares, they make me glad,
They give delight I cannot name,
And buy me comfort when I'm sad.

Come here and open wide your eyes,
You see earth's glory at my feet,
You see the sky above my head,
The sunshine on my garden-seat;
You see the love that lights my home,
The children round my cottage-door—
The birds, the bees, the grass and flowers,
And you have dared to call me poor!

Come here and open wide your ears,
And hark the music morning makes,
When from the hills and from the woods
Her high and holy anthem breaks,
Come here and catch the grand old songs
That Nature sings me evermore—
The whispering of a thousand things,
And tell me—tell me, am I poor?

Not rich is he, though wider far
His acres stretch than eye can roll,
Who has no sunshine in his mind,
No wealth of beauty in his soul,
Not poor is he, though never known
His name in hall or city mart,
Who smiles content beneath his load,
With God and Nature in his heart.

A French Romance.

A few months ago a young shopman in one of the leading houses in Paris, saw a young lady enter, to whom, during the past eight or ten days he had sold a number of dresses, shawls, gloves, &c. By her accent he surmised that she must be a New York lady. The stranger was very pretty, and naturally the young man made himself agreeable and attentive. Whenever she visited the shop she addressed herself to him, and while examining the articles he placed before her, talked much. The day we speak of she was less communicative than usual; and after having made a somewhat hurried selection she said to the clerk:—

I shall be at my hotel in one hour; here is the address. Be kind enough to accompany the porter when he brings those articles."

With these words, she bowed reservedly, and hastily left the shop.

The young man was at a loss what to think. However, an hour later he entered the apartment of the American lady, who invited him, without ceremony, like an acquaintance of long standing, to lunch with her. Although thinking his customer's manner somewhat strange, the clerk accepted. While partaking of the repast, the young lady somewhat abruptly addressed her guest, saying, "Sir, are you gallant enough to protect a woman against any insult to which she might be subjected? Answer me with truth and candor."

"Without conceit, I say yes," answered the young man.

"Very well. You work in order to make money. Is it not so?"

"Certainly."

"This is what I wish to propose. I am alone, or almost alone, in the world; my fortune or my actions concern no one but myself; I wish to see the exhibition and know Paris. But I perceive that there is nothing more difficult than for a woman to be in your country without a protector. You please me, and if you do not object, you shall be my companion. I will repay you for your lost time."

The young man tried to speak, but she immediately resumed:—"I insist on renumerating you; this is strictly a matter of business; I regard it in that light. Accept or decide. What shall it be?"

"I accept," answered the clerk, after a moment's hesitation.

"I am satisfied," continued the stranger, "that you are an honorable young man, and will not make yourself ridiculous by making love and flattering me, for I warn you that the very first compliment you pay me ends our contract. Is it agreed?"

"Madam, I am at your service."

"From to-morrow?"

"From this moment! I require only time to write to my employers."

And the terms of this extraordinary compact were entered in the letter.

The clerk was charming; he proved himself intelligent, attentive, delicate, without all that small talk which men generally delight to inflict on women. In fact the American lady was truly delighted with the choice she had made. A fortnight afterwards she handed the amiable clerk a roll of bank-notes; and they separated, mutually pleased with each other.

But it happened that as the lady was about to proceed to England, thence to embark for America, a commissioner hastened towards her and inquired if she was Miss X. Upon answering in the affirmative, he placed a small box and a letter in her hand. The box contained a set of diamonds, the letter a few words only, but so well chosen to express true affection that the young lady started, not for London, but back to her hotel in Paris. It is needless to say that the letter was from the young clerk, who had taken this method of returning the money forced upon him by the young lady for services rendered. She sent to inquire for him. He had not given her his address; and he had not returned to his former employer. Ultimately she learnt that he had taken in another house a situation far inferior to the one he formerly occupied. She wrote; he came at once. They were soon afterwards married.
