For Congress,
COL. SAM. HAMBLETON,
OF TALBOT CO.

The Late Elections.

The returns from the recent State elections have not been entirely received, but sufficient to indicate that Pennsylvania has gone Republican by about 12,000; Ohio 15,000; Indiana 2,000; and Nebraska 2,000. The Democrats gain two Congressmen in Pennsylvania and two in Ohio. They also elect their Mayor in Philadelphia.

The Baltimore Gazette makes the following comments thereon:

The election returns from that wide belt of country comprising the States of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Nebraska although imperfect and partial, indicate that the people of the North continue to support the course of the Radical party. It is possible that local causes have contributed to the triumph of that party in the recent elections, which may be inoperative at the Presidential election, and that the result of the contest in November may be very different from the issue of the struggle on Tuesday. It is not probable, however, that any such sanguine anticipations will be realized. We are bound to deal frankly with this matter, and to say that, in our judgment, the States which have just endorsed the policy of the Radical party will in November give heavy majorities for General Grant. It is with deep regret and sadness that we record these convictions. To the people of Maryland, outside of the office-seekers and the pot-house politicians, the decision of the Northern States amounts to nothing. We enjoy at present the rights and the liberties bequeathed us by our fathers. But for our oppressed brethern of the South we feel the keenest sympathy, and as the late elections in the North seem to evidence a determination to consign them for years to come to the despotism under which they now languish, we must look this possible fact in the face.

If General Grant, then, is to be elected, the immediate and unhappy future is easily to be forseen. Under the guidance of the demagogues who have heretofore led the Radical party, ultra-Radicalism will control the Government. Under Radical rule, Government as a Constitutional Government will cease to exist. The exigencies of party will be the policy which will be alone adopted by the Administration. State Governments and Constitutions will, as heretofore, be established or overthrown, as the partisan necessities of the ruling faction may dictate, and the "Constitution and Union as they were" will be as obsolete as are the ancient republican instutions of Greece and Rome. But it is scarcely worth while now to forecast the future. The Government as established by our fathers has even now ceased to exist. A military despotism and negro domination will not be likely to restore civil liberty and constitutional government in the South, and the approval by the people of the North of the unconstitutional and arbitrary measures of a rump Congress will certainly not tend to secure their rights and freedom. It seems as if the old order of things had now passed away forever, and it is with sad forebodings that patriotic men now look forward to the coming days. Nevertheless, let all honest men adhere to duty. There may yet be opportunities, which, rightly used, may be turned to good account. Maryland and Kentucky, mindful of their olden renown for patriotism and love of country, will stand firmly in the front in resistance to the ruinous radicalism of the age. Let us still hope that many of their sister States will be found hand in hand with them in November.

Queen Anne's Items.

From the Observer.

CONTRACT AWARDED.—The County Commissioners awarded, on Tuesday, the contract for repairing Crumpton causeway to Joseph C. Shepherd, Esq., for $1800.

SUICIDE.—On Friday last a white woman named Maria Magraw, who has for several years been an inmate of the Alms House in this county, was found in the afternoon hanging in the barn. She had ascended a ladder and fastened the rope by which she was hung to one of the beams which support the rafters of the barn, and swung herself off. When found she was cold in death. No reason is assigned for this freak except that of inheritance, several of her ancestors having committed suicide in a similar manner. An inquest was held over her body, the jury rendering a verdict in accordance with the above facts.

The fashion in New York this season is said to be to have no groomsmen at the weddings.

THE OCTOBER TERM of the Circuit Court for this County will commence on Monday next. The indications are for a protracted session.

A DAY OF THANKSGIVING.—On Tuesday last President Johnson issued his Proclamation, recommending that Thursday, the 26th day of November next, be set apart and observed by all the people of the United States as a day for public praise, thanksgiving and prayer to the Almighty Creator and Divine Ruler of the Universe.

The Convention of Maryland Editors.

From the Sun of Wednesday.

The Maryland Editors' Convention, which assembled in this city some months since, held an adjourned meeting at Rechabite Hall yesterday morning. Mr. Geo. W. Wilson, of the Marlboro' Gazette, the President of the Convention, being absent, on motion of Mr. George Colton, of the Annapolis Republican, Mr. Thomas K. Robson, of the Easton Star, was called to the chair, and Mr. Chas. A. Wails, of the Salisbury Eastern Shoreman, was selected as secretary. The committee on constitution and by-laws, appointed at the last meeting, made a report, which was adopted. On motion of Mr. B. Everett Smith of the Worcester Shield, it was resolved that the editors throughout the State be requested to publish the constitution and by-laws, and that such editors as are not present communicate to the corresponding secretary their approval of them and comply with the requirements of the same. The following permanent officers of the Association were then elected: President, George W. Wilson; first vice-president, George Colton; second vice-president, J. Guest King; third vice-president, Wm. L. Seabrook; recording secretary, Chas. O. Wails; corresponding secretary, Wm. H. Ruby; treasurer, Geo. Colton; executive committee, Thos. K Robson, B. Everett Smith and E Wells. On motion, it was ordered that the next annual meeting of the convention be held in Baltimore on the third Thursday of October, 1869. Mr. Geo. Colton stated that he would correspond with all the editors of the State with a view of holding a meeting in May next. The president was authorized to change the day of the next annual meeting, if necessary, so as to make it conform to the meeting of the State Agricultural Society, and the question of holding a special meeting in the spring was left to the discretion of the president and vice-presidents. Mr. B. Everett Smith then addressed the convention briefly on the many benefits to result to the editorial fraternity of the State from the association of editors, and particularly on the proposed reformation of the alleged abuses which had grown up under the system of advertising agents. Mr. George Colton endorsed the sentiments of Mr. Smith, and after the transaction of some business of a private nature the convention adjourned.

Will We Have War if Seymour is Elected!

Mr. Pendleton in the able speech delivered by him at the immense Democratic mass meeting held at Pittsburg, on Monday night last, said:

Now, gentlemen, I do not intend to speak to you further upon the idea on which I started out, which was that the interest of Pennsylvania, the interest of Pittsburg, more than any other part of Pennsylvania, requires that the Republican party should be put out of power, and that the Democratic party should be put in power. Because, with the success of the Democratic party will be brought to to the South restoration of civil government, and a restoration of that prosperity which, for many years, they enjoyed in the Union under the Constitution. I have heard it said by our Republican friends, time and time again, that if this policy is carried out, and if the Democratic party succeeds, we will have war. [A voice, "that's the talk."]

Well now, gentlemen, if the Democratic party succeeds, if we elect Seymour and Blair, if we obtain possession of the House of Representatives, who will make the war? [A voice, "The nigger."] It will It will not be the Democrats, because we will have gotten all the power we want. [Laughter.] I hardly think it will be the colored citizens of American descent.—[Renewed Laughter.] I feel certain it will not be the Radicals, because they have a peace-maker in the shape of a great many bonds in their pockets. [A voice, "Three cheers for Pendleton."] I think it will be nobody who will make a war, because the experience of seven years has taught us that the American people intend to govern the country by the ballot, and not by the bullet. [Cheers.] I am very much of a peace man myself. I always have been. I believe I could go into any Quaker neighberhood in this State and pass for the strongest of their sect upon that subject. [Cheers and Laughter.] But I will tell you this, my friends. If any man or any set of men, undertake to make war and to get up a civil commotion of this country because a majority of the people choose to bestow power upon the Democratic party, I would advise them, before they set out to do it, to dig their graves and uniform themselves in their winding sheets. [Cheers, and cries of "That's good."]

I heard a little discussion on the subject the other day when I was in New England. There were two men seated in a railroad car behind me engaged in discussion. I heard that it was a political discussion, and one of them had a great, loud, horse, swelling voice. When I heard it from behind me, it sounded as though it might have come from a gentleman as tall as Mr. Cowan and twice as large. The man who was talking with him had a thin, squeaking voice, and sounded as though the owner might have been a girl dressed up in boy's clothing, and trying to conceal his voice. The big one was a Republican and the little chap was a Democrat.—[Laughter.] And they discussed this question of war, and they discussed the position of the New York Convention. And this Republican had a great deal to say because Preston Forrest, and Wade Hampton, and other people were there. But the little fellow managed his part of the discussion very well and each time he would make a thrust the Republican would get angry; at last he broke out in a strain of language that shocked all my notions of Puritan propriety. And I wondered that such language would be tolerated on the banks of the Kennebec Said he, "Every d——d rebel in the South will vote for Seymour and Blair." Well, says the little fellow, "I hope they will. It is the first sensible thing that I have heard of their doing in ten years, and you ought to praise them for it." [Laughter.]

The Republican got more angry still. Said he: Every d——d thief will vote for Seymour and Blair. Well, says the little fellow, I hope they will. It only shows that they have stolen enough while they were members of the Republican party. [Laughter and cheers.] That they now have come to repentance and a better heart. Said the Republican: "South Carolina will vote for Seymour and Blair," and then he said he wished South Carolina was in a place that it is not quite fit to be named before an audience like this, but is a place where they seldom have the frosts of winter. [aughter.] He wished she had been there from the beginning, and as she had not been there from the beginning he wished she would go there now.

Then he closed up his statement with the enunciation that South Carolina would vote for Seymour and Blair. Well, says the little man, I hope she will. South Carolina has got along very well, and she will get along a great deal better if you will let her alone. For, says he, I have learned that you can coax a dog with a beefsteak better than you can entice him with a stick. But I thought my Democratic friend, with his little weak voice, had discussed the question so wisely that I could not do better than repeat it as a part of my speech in your hearing. [Applause.]

Triennial Episcopal Convention.

NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—In the Episcopal Convention to-day the committee on the creation of new dioceses, through their chairman, the Rev. Dr. Thomas C. Pitkin, reported an application for the creation of the Eastern Shore of Maryland, east of the Chesapeake bay and the Susquehanna, into a separate diocese. The report stated the application was accompanied with evidence sufficient to the committee that all the requirements of the constitution of the church for the division of the diocese had been fully complied with, and the report concluded with resolutions giving consent, with concurrence of Bishops, to the division of the diocese of Maryland, and providing for the manner of electing a new Bishop. The report was adopted, with amendment.

Judge Conyngham, of Pennsylvania, presented about twenty memorials from individual laymen in various dioceses, all having reference to ritualism, the use of vestments, and such like innovations upon Episcopal service, declaring that these give ground for scandal, and approach in outward form to the Church of Rome. The Judge proposed a new canon by which all vestments, during service, except the surplices, bonds, gown and all vestments for choirs or other assistants, be forbidden; also candlesticks, taper altars, crucifixes on or over communion table, elevating elements, making the sign of the cross, processions in church, the use of incense, and many other things introduced by ritualism into the church. Referred to the committee on canons.

From Our Worton Correspondent.

DEAR TRANSCRIPT—Since my last, the summer which I loved so well has passed, and the Autumn, which I love "yet better still," has dawned upon us in resplendent beauty. The humming bird with his garden friends, have their daily meeting ended; and the flowers, too—lending their perfume, floating on the summer's air, blending beauty with their fragrance and scattering sweetness everywhere—we miss: for no longer will

"The blushing clouds unfold
At the sun's coming, all their blossoms red;
And, at the evening, in their laps of gold
Pillow his genial head," now that the summer days are o'er. The queen-like Dahlia has usurped the throne of the Rose, and reigns in crimson and gold. The frail and fragrant beauties of nature, have given place to the more sturdy of creation's grace, and the beautiful changing leaves—leaves of bright yellow, gay leaves of red—compose for the head of sage Autumn a rich crown: the gold and vermillion commingled make a far richer crown, brighter than May, though it boasts of no fair blossoms:

And trees robed in deep yellow bespangled with red,
A crown of rich beauty than any that's fled, takes the place of the thousand buds and fragrances and the genial opening flowers, when in gentle summer, lovely Nature's all aglow. Some look upon this season as one of sadness. Not think so we. The advent of April is an angel eve rippling over life renewed—the morns of May are magnificent matins gushing from the hoyden hour lips of beauty and brilliance—June is a joy jubilee echoing melodies of love and languor—July moves a mermaid magnificent, queening it over earth with day-brows bathed in silver dew, and every moment fringed in fragrant flowrets—August sweeps like a monarch in majesty sublime, with anthem airs marking its day-dial in all the glory of summer's imperial power; but to us September and October—sweet, bracing October—with its mild mid-days, when earth itself seems asleep in its silence and slumber—its long, loved and lingering twilights—its nights of stars, and dews, and dreams—all combine to shrine this season as an empress of glory in our hearts and homes.

During the interval between the summer's sports and the winter's entertainments, we have been unusually quiet for festive Worton. But we do not wish it to be understood that we are at a standstill. No, no! Improvements still progress, and there seems to be no lack of enterprise among our go-ahead citizens. The fruit crop was a complete failure with us, and of course no bustling teams and steaming vessels, laden with golden fruit, thronged our wharves and thoroughfares "as of old." Nothing daunted, our people have borne their loss with Christian fortitude, and have consumed their leisure time in embellishing their homes, improving their estates, cultivating social intercourse, and attending to other little matters which heighten their enjoyment and render their earthly home more comfortable. Mr. Elias Walraven has had a visitation of parental esteem, in the addition of a large and commodious front building to his before comfortable home. We hope that the happiness of the inmates may be increased in proportion to their house. The genial Madam will now have ample room in which to entertain the numerous friends who long to bask in the sunshine of her smiles, or be refreshed at her generous board. And Sir Reybold's marshalled hosts of "happeners in," who shall with the surprises come with the snow, shall no doubt be welcomed by hearts not excelled in size by their quarters. Long life to Cousin 'Lias and his household, not forgetting the younger Raven.

Mr. Lewin Usilton is also making a thorough change in affairs at his homestead. About to desert the old hive, he has erected at some distance from the old dwelling, a substantial frame edifice in which himself and family are to begin life anew. New house, new barns, new fencing and everything new except the inmates, whom we trust will remain in their pristine glory; even the same kind, good citizens of yore. His farm will be greatly enhanced in value, and the improvements very decided, when his plans shall have been consummated. College Cove has ever been a very attractive place, from its delightful situation and salubrious atmosphere; rendered more so by the open-handed liberality and unbounded hospitality of its host and whole-souled hostess and family. Whether his reputation will be augmented or not, by the change, remains to be seen

Mr. J. P. Nickolson, too, on the Walker Farm, has exchanged his former residence for a handsome structure upon the old site. Johnny, among other improvements and reforms, has adorned a domicile with a wife; a partner to share his sorrows and joys; admiring his course, we recommend other old bachelors to emulate his illustrious example and—go and do likewise.

Mr. J. W. Corey has a new dwelling under course of construction, and when completed we expect it to be a model house: large and very commodious, with all the modern improvements and conveniences.

Our roads are in better repair than for a long time. Great credit is due the Flat Land Supervisor for the efficient manner in which he has performed his duty. Billy Stephens has immortalized himself by his Dutch Gap Canal arrangement through Castletown, and his bridge over Lizar's Run, with the assistance of the renowned Harvey.

Mr. Abram Hurlock deserves a vote of thanks for so greatly improving the road in front of his home-farm, which for so long a time has been miserably bad; its present good condition is a public rejoicing.

A word about St. James' Festival, which was held a short time ago. The day proved damp and chilly, but Worton turned out in her strength, and the occasion was one of great social enjoyment to both children and adults. The dinner and refreshment tables were arranged with taste and most bountifully supplied with substantials and dainties; and in the varied assortment there was not a poor dish to be seen. To the fair sex be all the praise

The Tournament held near your town was the event of the season. Worton was proud to bear off the second prize, considering the great odds against her—2 to 20—and if the other Knight took no prize, he was decidedly the most dashing and stylish rider among them: perhaps if he had not prided himself, so much, upon his horsemanship, might have been the victor. We attended the select party which followed, and if space were allowed would love to linger and describe the festive occasion. But we will say that it was a complete success: managers efficient—music excellent—and refreshments ample. To the gentlemanly Executive Committee every guest is indebted for their well-timed regulations and a very refreshing season. All went merry as a marriage bell—and time went on also—and

When Phœbus in the lap
Of Thetus had taken out his nap,
And, like a lobster boiled, the morn
From black to red began to turn, your correspondent, seated beside his fair companion of the evening, might have been seen wending his way to that land where all is peace and harmony: where discord never invades its sacred precincts; and where

Flowers and buds in glamor leaves
Have changed to piles of golden fruit
And heavy-laden harvest sheaves.
For 'tis the Autumn time.

SQUEEZEBREEZE.

A LARGE VOLUME would not contain the mass of testimony which has accumulated in favor of Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry as a safe, efficient, and reliable remedy in curing coughs, colds, and pulmonary disease.—Many of the cures are truly wonderful.
