THE FLOWER GIRL.

Fair lady, proud lady,
Will you buy these flowers of me?
The roses are red, as once were the cheeks
Of the wee dead babe on my knee.
Sweet the perfume of this hyacinth bloom,
But sweeter was baby's breath;
And a tenderer blue than these violets' hue
Were the eyes now closed in death.

Fair lady, proud lady,
Do buy these flowers of me—
If not for my sake, for the sake of the babe
You may one day dance on your knee!
See the gold of his hair, more bright and fair
Than marigolds dipped in dew—
Though the death-carved grace of the still, white face
Is cold as the lily in hue.

See the pallor that tips the thin white lips,
Which once the stock-pink vied,
And the little hands clenched with the pain that wrenched
The life from his heart when he died!
Small was the joy of my baby boy
In this world of sorrow, I know,
And I only crave for baby a grave
Where the flowers he loved may blow.

Ah, lady, fair lady,
You scoff my flowers in scorn;
But of me you must think, and your proud heart sink,
When your own wee baby is born!
God knows there blows no thornless rose,
And the rose of beauty will pale;
What the honey bee sips the hoar-frost nips,
And a feather may turn the scale!

Flowers, bright flowers, I sell at all hours—
I have sold them for years and years—
And now but crave a green little grave,
Where my lonely heart-strained tears
May charm from the earth full many a birth
Of flowers more fresh than the dawn,
To show me the light of the eyes that were bright,
And the smile of the spirit that's gone!

PRIVATE HABITS OF MR. H. GREELEY.

BY MARK TWAIN, OF THE TRIBUNE.

Horace Greeley gets up at three o'clock in the morning; for it is one of his favorite maxims, that only early rising can keep the health unimpaired and the brain vigorous. He then wakes up all the household and assembles them in the library by candle-light, and, after quoting the beautiful lines:

"Early to bed and early to rise
Make a man healthy, wealthy and wise,"

he appoints each individual's task for the day, sets him at it with encouraging words, and goes back to bed again. I mention here, in no fault-finding spirit, but with the deference justly due a man who is older and wiser and worthier than I, that he snores awfully. In a moment of irritation, once, I was rash enough to say I never would sleep with him until he broke himself of this unfortunate habit. I have kept my word with bigoted and unwavering determination.

At half-past eleven o'clock Mr. Greeley rises again. He shaves himself. He considers that there is great virtue and economy in shaving himself. He does it with a dull razor, sometimes humming part of a tune, (he knows part of a tune, and takes an innocent delight in regarding it as the first half of "Old Hundred;" but parties familiar with that hymn have felt obliged to confess that they could not recognize it, and, therefore, the noise he makes is doubtless an unconscious original composition of Mr. Greeley's,) and sometimes, when the razor is especially dull, he accompanies himself with a formula like this: "—— the——razor, and the —— outcast who made it."—H. G.

He then goes out into his model garden, and applies his vast store of agricultural knowledge to the amelioration of his cabbages; after which he writes an able agricultural article for the instruction of American farmers, his soul cheered the while with the reflection that if cabbages were worth eleven dollars apiece his model farm would pay.]

He next goes to breakfast, which is a frugal, abstemious meal with him, and consists of nothing but just such things as the market affords; nothing more. He drinks nothing but water—nothing whatever but water, and coffee, and tea, and Scotch ale, and lager beer, and lemonade with a fly in it—sometimes a house-fly, and sometimes a horse-fly, according to the amount of inspiration required to warm him up to his daily duties. During breakfast he reads the Tribune all through and enjoys the satisfaction of knowing that all the brilliant things in it, written by Young, and Cooke, and Hazard, and myself, are attributed to him by a confiding and infernal public.

After breakfast he writes a short editorial, and puts a large dash at the beginning of it, thus (——,) which is the same as if he put H. G. after it, and takes a savage pleasure in reflecting that none of us understrappers can use that dash, except in profane conversation when chafing over the outrage. He writes this editorial in his own handwriting. He does it because he is so vain of his penmanship. He always did take an inordinate pride in his penmanship. He hired out once in his young days, as writing-master, but the enterprise failed. The pupils could not translate his remarks with any certainty. His first copy was, "Virtue is its own reward," and they got it "Washing with soap is wholly absurd," and so the trustees at once discharged him for attempting to convey bad morals through the medium of worse penmanship.—But, as I was saying, he writes his morning editorial. Then he tries to read it over, and can't do it; and so sends it to the printers, and they try to read it, and can't do it; and so they set it up at random, as you may say, putting in what words they can't make out, and when they get aground on a long word they put in "reconstruction" or "universal suffrage," and spur off and paddle ahead, and the next morning if the degraded public can tell what it is all about, they say H G. wrote it, and if they can't they say it is one of those embecile understrappers, and that is the end of it.

On Sundays, Mr. Greeley sits in a prominent pew in Mr. Chapin's church, and lets on that he is asleep, and the congregation regard it as an eccentricity of genius.

When he is going to appear in public, Mr Greeley spends two hours on his toilet. He is the most painstaking and elaborate man about getting up his dress that lives in America. This is the chiefest and pleasantest foible. He puts on his old white overcoat, and turns up the collar. He puts on a soiled shirt, saved from the wash, and leaves one end of the collar unbuttoned. He puts on his most dilapidated hat, turns it wrong side before, cants it on to the back of his head, and jams an extra dent in the side of it. He pats on his most atrocious boots, and spends fifteen minutes tucking the left leg of his pants into his boot-top in what shall seem the most careless and unstudied way. But his cravat—it is into the arrangement of his cravat that he throws all his soul, all the powers of his great mind. After fixing at it for forty minutes before the glass it is perfect—it is askew every way—it overflows his coat collar on one side, and sinks into oblivion on the other—it climbs and it delves around his neck—the knot is conspicuously displayed under his left ear, and it stretches one of its long ends straight out horizontally, and the other goes after his eye, in the good old Toodles fashion—and then, completely and marvellously apparelled, Mr. Greeley strides forth, rolling like a sailor, a miracle of astounding costumery, the awe and wonder of the natives.

But I haven't time to tell the rest of his private habits. Suffice it that he is an upright and an honest man—a practical, great-brained man—a useful man to his nation and his generation—a famous man who has justly earned his celebrity—and withal the worst dressed man in this or any other country, even though he does take so thundering much pains, and put on so many frills about it. [For writing this article Mark was discharged.]

TIN.

Tin is one of the metals that have been known to man for a very long period. The localities in which it is found, are, however, rare, compared with the sources of other metals in common use. The most celebrated mines are those of Cornwall, in England, but it is also found in Malacca, in Mexico, and in some parts of the United States.

The processes by which tin is extracted from the ore are stamping and washing to remove the earthy matters; roasting to decompose the ore and to eliminate the arsenic and sulphur; washing again to dissolve out the salts of copper; reduction by which the tin is separated from oxygen and remaining earthy matters; refining or liquidation and boiling. Stamping is the crushing of the ore by a mill adapted to the purpose. Washing is performed with water, and by it a large quantity of earthy impurities are removed. In roasting the principal part of the sulphur and arsenic is converted into vapor and thus passes off from the furnace. The second washing dissolves the sulphate of copper (blue vitriol) and at the same time removes the principle part of the oxide of iron, which is lighter than the oxide of tin which forms the bulk of what remains. This oxide is now reduced. This part of the process consists in mixing the oxide of tin with powdered anthracite or charcoal, and a small proportion of lime as a flux, and fusing the mass in a reverberatory furnace. The oxygen is thus separated from the tin, and uniting with the charcoal passes off as carbonic acid, while the little earthy matter remaining is fused and unites with the lime and floats upon the top of the melted tin which is now drawn off from the bottom of the furnace. The tin has yet to be refined and boiled, which consists in heating until partial fusion takes place; the purer parts of the tin melt first, and are thus separated from the impure portions. The tin thus obtained is boiled, that is, it is kept in a melted state, and stirred with sticks soaked in water. The steam thus generated rises with force to the top of the molten mass, and carries with it dust, slag, and other mechanical impurities.

None of the tin of commerce is perfectly pure, nor is it necessary that it should be for other than chemical purposes. Tin is one of the most useful metals, and derives its industrial utility from its resistance to the action of oxygen at ordinary temperatures (remaining untarnished for a long time when exposed to the air), and the utility of its numerous alloys. The most common form in which tin is popularly used, is the tin plate of which ordinary tin ware is made.

The manufacture of tin plate is an interesting, though not a complicated process. The iron sheets are first thoroughly cleaned by the action of acids, scoured with bran, and plunged into a bath of melted tin which is covered by a stratum of melted grease. Successive clippings and the removal of superfluous tin completes the process. Copper is tinned upon a similar principle.

The common alloys of tin are plumber's solder, made of tin and lead, Britannia metal, made of tin, brass, antimony and bismuth; the common pewter; bell metal made of tin and copper, etc. An amalgam of tin and mercury is used for silvering mirrors. The extensive demand for tin in different forms renders it an important article of commerce, and the tin mines of Cornwall constitute one of the most important interests of the English Government.

SMILING AND WEEPING.—When the Hindoo priest is about to baptize an infant, he utters the following beautiful sentiments: "Little baby, thou enterest the world weeping, while all around thee smile. Countrive so to live that you may depart in smiles, while all around you weep."

NOT GROWING OLD.—An eminent divine, who is well on the down-hill road of life says beautifully feelingily—"They say I am growing old because my hair is silvered, and there are crow's feet upon my forehead, and my step is not so firm and elastic as of yore. But they are mistaken. That is not me.—The knees are weak, but the knees are not me. The brow is wrinkled, but the brow is not me. This is the house in which, I live. But I am young; younger than ever I was before."

NEW ESTABLISHMENT!
New Stock, Low Prices!
BUILDING HARDWARE, TIN WARE, AND STOVES.

THE citizens of Chestertown and the adjacent country, are respectfully invited to call at the New Establishment, (stand formerly occupied by Wm. Simpson, on High street, nearly opposite the Voshell House,) and examine our large and cheap stock.

IN BUILDING HARDWARE

We are able to offer great inducements to Carpenters, Mechanics, Farmers, Builders, and those who contemplate having building done. If all such will only give us a chance we are confident of being able to convince them that we can supply their wants with a better article and for less money, than any establishment in this town. Our stock in this line is very full, and we are constantly making additions to it,

TIN AND SHEET IRON WARE.

In this department our stock is very complete, comprising almost any thing that can be called for, and at prices that must, we are sure, give satisfaction. In Tin we also keep the celebrated Stamped Ware. We have in our employ experienced, skillful and faithful workmen, and always use good material.

Stoves.

We shall keep a good stock, of all kinds, purchased from manufacturers direct, and will sell at a very small advance.

TIN ROOFING AND SPOUTING, and all kinds of repairing (including repairs to stoves,) done promptly in a workmanlike and durable manner, at low rates.

HOUSEKEEPING GOODS,

Embracing Safes, Japanned and Block Tin Ware, Ornamental Chamber Sets, and fancy Ware generally, in great variety.

In conclusion we would remark that we have gone into this business with a determination to sell low, to spare no pains, and to do all in our power to give satisfaction: and we respectfully ask our friends and the public to give us a trial.

DURYEAS'
Satin Gloss Starch

HAS established a world-wide celebrity for being the Purest, Whitest, Strongest, and Most Glossy and Economical Starch known. Disinterested judges pronounce it the "Perfection of Starch."

The Messrs. Duryea have no occasion to personally assert the superiority of their goods. A discriminating public and the decision of the following scientific and disinterested judges establish it.

PRIZE MEDALS AWARDED
Duryeas' Starch and Maizena

For their "Perfection of Quality" at Grand Paris International Exposition, 1867. Great London International Exposition, 1862. Great Internat. Exposition, Hamburg, 1863. Great Internat. Exposition, Cologne, 1865. Also at States', Agricultural, American Institute and Maryland Institute Fairs.

Inferior Starch is sour, musty, or has a golden or yellow tinge, a color not desirable in one's linen. (It is absurd for the laundress to cleanse and bleach, and then discolor linen with impure yellow starch.)

Maizena

Is a pure flour, from the choicest Indian corn, and is used for all the purposes of Corn Starch and Arrowroot, to which it is superior. Put up in the same style of packets, and at same price, with directions for use.

For culinary purposes, call for Duryeas' Maizena. For the laundry, call for Duryeas' Satin Gloss Starch.

For sale by all grocers. Be sure you get our goods. Our name is on all our boxes.
