I'M GROWING OLD.

The following stanzas first appeared in the Andover Advertiser, and are said to have been written by a lady of New York city:

I'm growing old—'tis surely so;
And yet how short it seems,
Since I was but a sportive child,
Enjoying childish dreams!

I cannot see the change that comes
With such an even pace;
I mark not when the wrinkles fall
Upon my fading face.

I know I'm old; and yet my heart
Is just as young and gay
As e'er it was before my locks
Of bright brown turned to gray.

I knew these eyes to other eyes
Looked not so bright and glad
As once they looked; and yet 'tis not
Because my heart's more sad.

I never watched with purer joy
The floating clouds and glowing skies,
While glistening tears of rapture fill
These old and fading eyes.

And when I mark the cheek, where once,
The bright rose used to glow,
It grieves me not to see instead
The almonds crown my brow.

I've seen the flower grow old and pale,
And withered more than I;
I've seen it lose it's every charm,
Then droop away and die.

And then I've seen it rise again,
Bright as the beaming sky,
And young and pure and beautiful—
And felt that so shall I.

Then what if I am growing old—
My heart is changeless still,
And God has given me enough
This loving heart to fill.

I love to see the sun go down,
And lengthening shadows throw
Along the ground, while o'er my head
The clouds in crimson glow.

I see beyond these gorgeous clouds,
A country bright and fair,
Which needs no sun; God and the Lamb
Its light and beauty there.

O! I am glad I'm growing old!
For every day I spend
Shall bring me one day nearer that
Bright day that has no end.

OUR LITTLE NEWSBOY.

Hurrying to catch a certain car, at a certain corner, late one stormy night, I was suddenly arrested by the sight of a queer-looking bundle lying in a doorway.

"Bless my heart, it's a child! O John! I'm afraid he's frozen!" I exclaimed to my brother, as we both bent over the bundle.

Such a little fellow as he was in the big ragged coat; such a tired, baby face, under the fuzzy cap; such a purple, little hand, still holding fast a few papers; such a pathetic sight altogether was the boy, lying on the stone step, with the snow drifting over him, that it was impossible to go by.

"He is asleep, but he will freeze if left so long. Here, wake up my boy, and go home as fast as you can," cried John, with a gentle shake, and a very gentle voice; for the memory of a dear little lad, safely tucked at home, made him kind to the small vagabond.

The moment he was touched, the boy tumbled up, and before he was half awake, began his usual cry with an eye to business.

"Paper, sir? Herald, Transkip, Last ——" a great gap swallowed up the "last edition," and he stood blinking at us like a very young owl.

"I'll buy 'em all, if you'll go home, my little chap; it's high time you were asleep," said John, whisking the damp papers into one pocket and his purse out of another as he spoke.

"All of 'em? why there's six!" croaked the boy, for he was as hoarse as a raven.

"Never mind, I can kindle a fire with 'em. Put that in you pocket and trot home, my man, as fast as possible."

"Where do you live?" I asked, picking up the fifty cents that fell from the little fingers, too benumbed to hold it.

Mills Court, out of Hanover. Cold ain't it?" said the boy, blowing on his purple hands, and hopping feebly from one leg to another to take out the stiffness.

"He can't go all that way in this storm; such a night, and so used up with cold and sleep, John."

"Of course he can't; we'll put him in a car, began John: when the boy wheezed out—

"No, I've got ter wait for Sam. He'll be along as soon's the theater's done.—He said he would and so I'm waiting."

"Who is Sam?" I asked.

"He is the fellar I live with, I ain't got any folks and he takes care of me."

"Nice care; indeed; leaving a baby like you to wait for him here such a night as this," I said, crossly.

"Oh, he's good to me, Sam is, though he does knock me around sometimes, when I ain't spry. The big fellars shove me back, you see, and I gets cold, and can't sing out loud; so I dont sell my papers, and has to work 'em off late."

"Hear the child talk. One would think he was sixteen, instead of six," I said half laughing.

"I had some peanuts and two sucks of Joe's orange; but it warn't very fillin," he said gravely.

"I should think not. Here! one stew; and be quick, please," cried John, as we sat down in a warm corner of the confectioner's opposite.

While Jack shoveled in the hot oysters, with his eyes shutting up in spite of himself, we looked at him, and thought again of little rosy-face at home, safe in his warm nest, with mother love watching over him. Nodding towards the ragged, grimy, forlorn little creature, dropping asleep over his supper like a tired baby, I said.

"Can you imagine our Freddy out alone at this hour, trying to work off his papers, because afraid to go home till he has?"

"I'd rather not try," answered brother John, winking hard, as he stroked the little head beside him, which, by the by, looked very like a ragged, yellow doormat. I think brother John winked hard, but I can't be sure, for I know I did, and for a minute there seemed to be a dozen little newsboys dancing before my eyes.

"There goes our car, and it's the last," said John looking at me.

"Let it go, but don't leave the boy;" and I frowned at John for hinting such a thing.

"Here is his car. Now, my boy, bolt your last oyster, and come on."

"Good night ma'am; thankee sir," croaked the grateful little voice, as the child was caught up in John's strong hands, and set down on the car-step.

With a word to the conductor, and a small business transaction, we left Jack coiled up in the corner, to finish his nap as tranquilly as if it wasn't mid-night, and a "knocking round" might not await him at his journey's end.

We didn't mind the storm much, as we plodded home; and when I told the story to Rosy-face next day, his interest quite reconciled me to the sniffs and sneezes of a bad cold.

When busy fathers hurry home at night, I hope they will buy their papers of the smaller boys who get "shoved back;" the feeble ones who grow hoarse and can't "sing out; the shabby ones, who evidently have only forgetful Sams to care for them; and the hungry-looking ones, who don't get what is "filling."

For love of the little sons and daughters, safe at home, say a kind word, buy a paper even if you don't wan't it; and never pass by, leave them to sleep forgotten in the streets at midnight, with no pillow but a stone, no coverlid but the pitiless snow, and not even a tender-hearted robin to drop leaves over them.—Merry's Museum.

Girls Should Learn to Keep House.

A young lady cannot be too well instructed in anything which will affect the comfort of a family. Whatever position in society she occupies, she needs a practical knowledge of household duties. She may be placed in such circumstances that it will not be necessary for her to perform much domestic labor; but on this account she needs no less knowledge than if she was obliged to preside personally over the cooking stove and pantry. Indeed, I have thought that it is more difficult to direct others, and requires more experience, than to do the same work with our own hands.

Mothers are frequently so nice and particular that they do not like to give up any part of the care to their children.—This is a great mistake in their management, for they are often burdened with labor and need relief. Children should be early taught to make themselves useful; to assist their parents every way in their power, and to consider it a privelege to do so.

Young people cannot realize the importance of a thorough knowledge of housewifery; but those who have suffered the inconvenience and mortification of ignorance can well appreciate it. Children should be early indulged in their disposition to bake and experiment in various ways. It is often but troublesome help that they afford; still it is a great advantage to them. I know a little girl who at nine years old made a loaf of bread every week during the winter. Her mother taught her how much yeast, salt and flour to use, and she became quite an expert baker. Whenever she is disposed to try her skill in making simple cakes or pies, she is permitted to do so. She is thus, while amusing herself, learning an important lesson. Her mother calls her little housekeeper, and often permits her to get what is necessary for the table. She hangs the keys by her side and very musical is the jingling to her ears. I think before she is out of her teens, upon which she has not yet entered, that she will have some idea how to cook.

Some mothers give their daughters the care of housekeeping, each a week by turns. It seems to me a good arrangement and a most useful part of their education. Domestic labor is by all means incompatible with the highest degree of refinement and mental culture. Many of the most elegant, accomplished women I have known, have looked well to their household duties, and have honored themselves and their husbands by so doing.

Economy, taste, skill in cooking, and neatness of the kitchen, have a great deal to do in making life happy and prosperous. The charm of good housekeeping is in order, economy and taste displayed in attention to little things; and these things have a wonderful influence. A dirty kitchen and bad cooking have driven many a one from home to seek comfort and happiness somewhere else. None of our excellent girls are fit to be married until they are thoroughly educated in the deep and profound mysteries of the kitchen.—Presbyterian.

Men without Hearts.

We sometimes meet with men who seem to think that any indulgence in an affectionate feeling is weakness, they return from a journey, and greet their families with a distant dignity, and move among their children with the cold and lofty splendor of an iceberg surrounded by its broken fragments, There is hardly a more unnatural sight on earth than one of those families without a heart. A father had better extinguish a boy's eyes than take away his heart. Who that has experienced the joys of friendship, and values sympathy and affection, would not rather lose all that is beautiful in Nature's scenery than be robbed of the hidden treasures of the heart? Cherish, then, your hearts best affections. Indulge in the warm and gushing emotions of filial, paternal and fraternal love.—Miss Mulock.
