PEOPLE WILL TALK.

We may go through the world, but 'twill be very slow,
If we listen to all that is said as we go;
We'll be worried and fretted and kept in a stew,
For meddlesome tongues must have something to do.
For people will talk, you know, people will talk,
O! yes, they must talk.

If quiet and modest you'll have it presumed
That your humble position is only assumed,
You're a wolf in sheep's clothing, or else you are a fool;
But don't get excited—keep perfectly cool.

If generous and noble, they'll vent out their spleen,
You'll hear some loud hints that you're selfish and mean;
If upright and honest, and fair as the day,
They'll call you a rogue in a sly sneaking way.

And then, if you show the least boldness of heart,
Or a single inclination to take your own part,
They'll call you an upstart, conceited and vain;
But keep straight ahead, and don't stop to explain.

If threadbare your coat, or old fashioned your hat,
Some one of course will take note of that,
And hint rather strong that you can't pay your way;
But don't get excited whatever they say.

If you dress in the fashion, don't think to escape,
For they criticise then in a different shape;
You're ahead of your means, or your tailor's unpaid;
But mind your own business—there's naught to be made.

They'll talk before you, but then, at your back,
Of venom and slander there's never a lack;
How kind and polite in all that they say,
But bitter as gall when you're out of the way.

The best way to do is to do as you please,
For your mind, if you have one, will then be at ease,
Of course, you will meet with all sorts of abuse,
But don't think to stop them—it ain't any use,
For people will talk, you know, people will talk,
O! yes, people will talk.

[COMMUNICATED.]

The Cost of being Popular.

Did any of our readers ever think what it costs to be popular? in the general acceptation of the term. 'Tis used each day, with but a vague idea of what the popularity so boasted of has cost.

Of late, to be popular, means to be hail fellow well met, with all people. That you are ever ready to do a favor for Tom, Dick and Harry, no matter if they have a claim or not on you. That you shall put your name to all papers brought, sign all petitions presented, for what the people call improvement, although you feel assured 'tis but the accommodation of a few people in an obscure neighborhood, at the expense of the county. It means that you are security-general for all doubtful characters; although, perhaps, your credit is at so low an ebb, that no good man cares to go on your paper: and all this comes from your endeavor to be popular.

Horses and carriages are kept by you, but owned by the public. Everybody has a right to them, save your own family; they must give way to other people, for you and they are the obedient servants of the people. You must hire all the worthless servants, that others will not have. You must employ workmen at the highest cash price; and if they trifle away their time, you are expected to bear it like a lamb, for your popularity is at stake; and finally, keep open house, at all times, for all people. No matter if your family be worked to death; no matter if your children are kept hard down at the time of life when most they need recreation to give that development so necessary to health—a blessing more precious than gold, or office. No matter if the once fond partner of your bosom does complain of being over-worked, of having too great a tax imposed upon her weary frame; or if at times you fancy she is breaking in health, or fast losing that buoyancy of spirits which was once her charm and your delight; no matter for her haggard looks and dejected manner; all this must be forne for your sake—you are seeking popularity. Do not people call you one of the best of men, and praise your accommodating disposition far and near? Are you not known as the best-tempered man in the county? Have you not a smile, or a flattering word, for all you meet? 'Tis so: and how glad you are that no one can see behind the screen. How exultant you feel that the privacy of the family circle cannot be invaded: that family pride keeps your secret more secure than would triple locks of brass. You hear the praises sounded far and near, and you alone know at what cost all this is purchased. Would I could say secured; but 'tis not the word; popularity can only be maintained so long as you pander to the taste of the crowd. No man knows how long he may be the people's idol, nor how soon sink into oblivion. Doing all he can to secure and deserve their homage, one false step, one rash act, and all is lost—all the good forgotten—and only maledictions for the bad hurled upon his head: the more terrible, the more unsparing, as the more he was once loved. 'Tis like the love of woman, bowing in meek submission to every caprice of her lord and master, whilst he has her confidence and love; but hating the more intensely, from the very depth of her love.

I have always envied the statesman who boasted that he was the best-abused man in the land. It was a noble satisfaction to feel he had neither favor to ask nor to grant; no people to please; no popularity to lose. The force of circumstances had placed him upon the pinnacle of fame. He had only to do his duty to himself and God, and all would be well. 'Tis not so with the popular man. He is ever striving after new honors, which are attained only to give way to desires never still. 'Tis like the horse-leech, crying "Give, give." There is within a void nothing can fill, and all at what cost? Piquant is the question of the Bible, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" Methinks, "that still small voice" must forever be whispering in his ear, as did the slave of Scipio, when seated in his triumphal chariot, mid all the pomp and pageantry old Rome could boast, an humble tho' a truthful monitor, "Remember thou 'art but mortal." Does he remember this, and tremble? It would seem too often as if it were forgotten, when we see men sacrificing all the better teachings of morality, all the instincts of nature and humanity, to popularity.

Self-preservation is the first law of nature. It is the instinct of all the brute creation, to care for and protect its young. But the popular man must yield all this to the people. His family miserable; his fortune wasted; he dies, alas! too often, "unwept, unhonored and unsung." Is this picture over-drawn? Then is history false, for she but repeats herself. It was so with Louis XVIII, of France; Robespierre, a victim to his own bloody teachings; and when Napoleon's star of destiny set to rise no more, at St. Helena, all Europe felt relieved. In our own country, Webster died insolvent, with the stigma of the Hartford convention upon his fair fame. Clay, with the charge of bargain and corruption uncleared: Douglas, broken-hearted from disappointment, and the ingratitude of a Republic; down to Lincoln, who yielded up his life a sacrifice—the result of measures he at first opposed as truly as the most earnest lover of freedom could demand, or a country, upon a constitutional basis, applaud. HOWARD.

DEAR TRANSCRIPT—In giving you a few lines on Educational matters, our aim is humble, our sphere narrow, confined as it is, to Primary Schools. It seems to us, that one of the greatest difficulties that beset the path of a teacher, (and, be it understood, that this is uttered in no complaining spirit whatever,) is the classification of pupils; that is, keeping them classified. For example: a scholar is absent from school for several weeks which may not be sufficiently long to justify his removal to a lower class, but if he is retained in the class to which he originally belonged, must not the teacher act the part of Procrastes in a moral sense? That old robber placed on his couch all the unfortunate victims that fell into his hands If too long, their limbs were lopped off; if too short, they were stretched. But if we attempt to stretch the deficient pupil to the standard of his class, we at the same time retard the progress of the more punctual one, and, go a little beyond the old robber. In some branches this difficulty does not occur, as each lesson being complete in itself, having no connection with the preceding ones, a scholar may enter his class and the teacher be subjected to no additional labor. But, in Arithmetic, one page is often a stepping-stone to the succeeding one, and a pupil finds on his return to school, a link broken, the connection gone. In regard to punishment, we think none is more effectual, certainly, none more humane than detaining them in the school-room during hours of recreation. If no delicious fruits, no sparkling waters retreat when they attempt to gratify the hunger and thirst, as they did from Tantalus of old, the merry voices of their more obedient or industrious schoolmates grate harshly on the ear when they are debarred the pleasure of mingling with them. Napoleon thought a nation could be best governed by wearing the velvet glove on an iron hand. Whether the velvet glove will alone, suffice as some think, each teacher can judge for himself. It was a grand thought of our forefathers, a system of Public Education. We once heard a gentleman remark that it was hard that he should be taxed to support Public Schools when he had no children attending such schools. This species of reasoning is on a par with that of the Irishman who was aroused from his slumbers with the startling news that the hotel was on fire. "Och," says he, "let her burn: I am only a boarder!" Or, like that of some passengers aboard a certain vessel that a leak not a hundred years since, nor a hundred miles from the mouth of Fairlee Creek. The crew having labored faithfully at the pumps, the Captain cried out to the passengers in the cabin to come up and assist them. "No, sir," exclaimed one, "we have a pot of beans here to eat and we are only passengers." We are all passengers aboard the "ship of State," some having a great, others a less interest, and, the system of Public Instruction is not the weakest plank in that ship. The teacher's vocation creates but little noise in the world, but, does not the silent dew refresh the earth as much as some other more boisterous agents of Nature? When the gorgeous temple of Solomon was being erected, there was not heard the sound of ax or hammer in all the building thereof. But that splendid structure arose which attested that the workmen had not been idle. Yours, A TEACHER.

General Jackson's Porter.

When General Jackson was President, Jimmy O'Neal, the porter, was a marked character. He had his foibles, which were offensive to the fastidiousness of Col. Donelson, and caused his dismissal on an average about once a week. But on an appeal to the higher court, the verdict was invariably reversed by the good nature of the old General. Once, however, Jimmy was guilty of some flagrant offence and was summoned before the highest tribunal at once. The General, after stating the details of the misdeed, observed:

"Jimmy, I have borne with you for years, in spite of all complaints, but in this act you have gone beyond my power of endurance."

"And do you believe the story?" asked Jimmy.

"Certainly," answered the General, "I have just heard it from two Senators.

"Faith," replied Jimmy, "if I believed all that twenty Senators said about you, its, little I'd think you fit to be President."

"O, pshaw! Jimmy," concluded the President, "clear out and go on duty, but be more careful hereafter."

Jimmy remained with his kind-hearted patron, not only to the close of his Presidential term, but accompanying him to the Hermitage, was with him to the day of his death.
