The Legend of Easter Eggs.

BY FITZ JAMES O'BRIEN.

"Dearest papa," says my boy to me,
As he merrily climbed on his father's knee,
"Why are those eggs that you see me hold
Colored so finely with blue and gold?
And what is the beautiful bird that lays
Such beautiful eggs on Easter days?"

You have heard, my boy, of the man who died,
Crowned with keen thorns and crucified;
And how Joseph, the wealthy—whom God reward—
Cared for the corpse of his martyred Lord,
And piously tombed it within the rock,
And closed the gate with a mighty block.

Now close by the tomb a fair tree grew,
With pendulous leaves and blossoms of blue;
And deep in the green tree's shadowy breast
A beautiful singing bird sat on her nest,
Which was bordered with mosses like malachite,
And held four eggs of an ivory white.

Now when the bird from her dim recess
Beheld the Lord in his burial dress,
And looked on the Heavenly face so pale,
And the dear feet pierced with the cruel nail,
Her heart nigh broke with a sudden pang,
And out of the depth of her sorrow she sang.

All night long till the morn was up
She sat and sung in her moss-wreathed cup,
A song of sorrow as wild and shrill
As the homeless wind when it roams the hill;
So full of tears, so loud and long,
That the grief of the world seemed turned to song.

But soon there came through the weeping night
A glimmering angel clothed in white;
And he rolled the stone from the tomb away,
Where the Lord of the Heavens and the earth lay,
And Christ arose in the cavern's gloom,
And in living lustre came from the tomb.

Now the bird that sat in the heart of the tree
Beheld the celestial mystery,
And its heart was filled with a sweet delight,
And poured a song on the throbbing night,
Notes climbing notes, still higher, higher,
They shoot to Heaven like spears of fire.

When the glittering white-robed angel heard
The sorrowing song of that grieving bird,
And heard the following chant of mirth
That hailed Christ risen from the earth,
He said, "sweet bird, be forever blest,
Thyself, thy eggs, and thy moss-wreathed nest."

And ever, my child, since that blessed night,
Where death bowed down to the Lord of light,
The eggs of that sweet bird changed their hue,
And burn with red, gold, and blue;
Remembering mankind, in their simple way,
Of the holy marvel of Easter day.

VIRGINIA is in the midst of a grave political crisis. It has been decided that the Constitution for that State, which was framed by the Radicals, shall be voted upon, and the sixth day of July has been fixed by General Canby as the day on which the vote for or against ratification of that instrument shall be taken. Two of its worst clauses—the one enforcing the test oath, and the other disfranchisement are to be voted on separately. They would, if sustained, either prohibit from voting or holding office ninety-five out of every hundred of the legal white voters of the State. Within the past year, although the principle for which the Virginians were contending remains the same, the issues have been materially changed. A year ago the choice was between the infamous Underwood Constitution, with its fierce uncompromising proscriptiveness, or a military satrapy. To-day, if the test oath and the disfranchising clauses can be voted down, the people of Virginia are reluctantly disposed to accept the rest of the instrument, although they have endeavored, but without avail, to have the sections relating to county and township organization voted on separately.

All the Democratic journals of the State, with here and there an exception, agree that it is better to tolerate the Radical Constitution with the most obnoxious clauses eliminated, than to remain, as they are under Radical rule, supported by the bayonets of the military. The split between the two wings of the Republican party of that State has also changed in important particulars the aspect of political affairs; whilst the withdrawal of its own ticket by the Democratic Convention in favor of Walker, the conservative Republican candidate for Governor, narrows the contest down to a choice between the latter and Wells, the candidate of the ultra Republicans. This addition of the Democratic strength to the Conservative side greatly improves the chances of Walker's election, although Colonel Withers, who was to have been the Democratic candidate for Governor, still considers the result to be doubtful. As a choice between two evils, Walker is generally regarded as preferable to Wells. The objection to him is that he is a Northern man. The points in his favor are that he represents a large body of moderate Republicans, and is strenuously opposed to the proscriptive policy of the Radicals. Since he has been at the South, his friends assert that he has not identified himself with any political party; but that whilst entertaining moderate Republican views, he has not only not obtruded those opinions upon others, but as President of a Bank at Norfolk has sought to fulfil worthily his duty as an active man of business, and as a citizen of the State. On the other hand, Wells, the candidate of the Radical wing of the party, has many of the vices and much of the odor of the carpet-bagger.—When the war broke out he was a lawyer without practice in Michigan, and entered the army to better his fortunes. What his earlier record was, as a soldier, we do not know; but he first came into prominence by his petty acts of tyranny whilst serving as Provost Marshal at Alexandria. After the war closed, he drifted down to Richmond, and commenced there the practice of law under the auspices of the immaculate Underwood—making whiskey cases, as most lucrative, his speciality.—Of course he put money in his purse, and by leaguing himself with negroes and low whites, became a prominent leader of the Radicals. General Schofield appointed him Provisional Governor. Subsequently he became the Gubernatorial candidate of the party he had served so zealously and so unscrupulously, with a negro candidate for the second place on his ticket.

Such are the candidates of the two wings of the party now arrayed against each other in Virginia—the pivot, upon which the success of either turns, being the Constitution which is to be submitted to the people on the 6th of July next. It is very generally admitted that the test oath and disfranchising clauses will be voted down. Even Wells now professes to desire their elimination from from the Constitution which was framed by his friends and backers. The Walker movement is, therefore, strengthened by the concessions made by his opponents. The argument in favor of ratifying the Constitution, thus modified, as used by Walker himself in the speech made by him at Norfolk on Wednesday last, seems, as far as we can judge, to express what is now the prevailing sentiment in Virginia.—He said: "The edict has gone forth "that you shall reconstruct the State out "of the material presented, and the ques-"tion is, will you admit this reconstruc-"tion? If it is the best we can do. All "should go to work with right good will "to do the best under the circumstances. "It is certain the State will be reconstruct-"ed, whether we consent or not."

This is the point which touches Virginians most nearly. They must either turn the State over to the negroes and the military, or they must accept the situation, and by allying themselves to the Conservative Republicans, get rid, at once and forever, of the proscriptive clauses in a Constitution which they have reason to fear will otherwise be eventually, and, in its worst form, fastened upon them by underhanded means. Their decision has been taken by the withdrawal of the Democratic candidate, and by the avowed determination of the Democratic party of the State to vote the Conservative Republican ticket. Whilst deploring the fact that they feel compelled by force of circumstances to abandon the high ground on which they formerly stood so steadfastly; we can only hope that the benefits they expect to derive from this change of base, will be commensurate with the sacrifices they have made to conciliate the rancor of their enemies.—Balto. Gazette.

To Young Men.

It is easier to be a good business man than a poor one. Half the energy displayed in keeping ahead that is required to catch up when behind will save credit, give more time to business, and add to the profit and reputation to your word.—Honor your engagements. If you promise to meet a man, or do a certain thing at a certain moment, be ready at the appointed time. If you have work to do, do it at once, cheerfully, and therefore more speedily and correctly. If you go out on business, attend promptly to the matter on hand, and then as promptly go about your own business. Do not stop to tell stories in business hours.

If your have a place of business, be found there when wanted. No man can get rich by sitting around stores and saloons. Never "fool" on business matters. If you have to labor for a living, remember that one hour in the morning is better than two at night. If you employ others, be on hand to see that they attend to their duties, and to direct with regularity, promptness, liberality. Do not meddle with any business you know nothing of. Never buy an article simply because the man that sells it will take it out in trade.—Trade is money. Time is money. A good business habit and reputation is always money. Make your place of business pleasant and attractive; then stay there to wait on customers.

Never use quick words, or allow yourself to make hasty or ungentlemanly remarks, to those in your employ for to do so lessens their respect for you and your influence over them. Help yourself and others will help you. Be faithful over the interests confided to your keeping, and all in good time your responsibilities will be increased. Do not be in too great haste to get rich. Do not build until you have arranged and laid a good foundation. Do not—as you hope to work for success—spend time in idleness. If your time is your own, business will suffer if you do. If it is given to another for pay, it belongs to him, and you have no more right to steal that than money. Be obliging. Strive to avoid harsh words and personalities. Do not kick every stone in the path; more miles can be made in a day by going steadily on than by stopping to kick. Pay as you go. A man of honor respects his words as he does his bond. Ask, but never beg. Help others when you can, but never give when you cannot afford to, simply because it is fashionable. Learn to say no. No necessity of snapping it out dog-fashion, but say it firmly and respectfully. Have but few confidents, and the fewer the better. Use your own brains rather than those of others. Learn to think and act for yourself. Be vigilant. Keep ahead, rather than behind the time.

Young men, cut this out, and if there is folly in the argument, let us know.

Hold On.

Hold on to your tongue when you are just ready to swear, lie, or speak harshly or use any improper word.

Hold on to your hand when you are about to strike, pinch, steal or do any improper act.

Hold on to your foot when you are on the point of kicking, running away from study, or pursuing the path of errors, or shame, or crime.

Hold on to your temper when you are angry, excited, or imposed upon, or others are angry about you.

Hold on to your heart when evil associates seek your company and invite you to join in their games, of mirth and revelry.

Hold on to your name at all times, for it is more valuable to you than gold, high places, or fashionable attire.

Hold on to the truth, for it will serve you well and do you good throughout eternity.

Hold on to your virtue—it is above all price to you in all times and places.

Hold on to your good character, for it is and ever will be your wealth,
