THE OLD TURNPIKE.

We hear no more the clanging hoof,
And the stage-coach rattling by,
For the steam king rules the traveled world,
And the old pike's left to die.
The grass creeps o'er the flinty path,
And the stealthy daisies steal
Where once the stage-horse, day by day,
Lifted his iron heel.

No more the weary stager dreads
The toil of the coming morn;
No more the bustling landlord runs
At the sound of the echoing horn;
For the dust lies still upon the road,
And bright-eyed children play
Where once the clattering hoof and wheel
Rattled along the way.

No more we hear the cracking whip,
And the strong wheels' rumbling sound;
But ah! the water drives us on,
And an iron horse is found!
The coach stands rusting in the yard,
The horse has sought the plow;
We have spanned the world with an iron rail,
And the steam king rules us now!

The old turnpike is a pike no more,
Wide open stands the gate;
We have made a road for our horse to stride
And we ride at a flying rate.
We have filled up the valleys and levelled the hills,
And tunnelled the mountain's side,
And round the rough crag's dizzy verge
Fearlessly now we ride.

On—on—on—with a haughty front!
A puff, a shriek and a bound;
While the tardy echoes wake too late
To echo back the sound;
And the old pike road is left alone,
And the stagers seek the plow;
We have circled the earth with an iron rail,
And the steam king rules us now!

The Mistakes of a Night.

A PROMINENT BUT OBFUSTICATED CITIZEN OF ST. LOUIS IN THE WRONG BED.

[From a St. Louis paper.]

Our merchant friend does business on Main, but resides on Oliver street, somewhere between Tenth and Twentieth. That is about as explicit as we care to be regarding locality. He dwells in one of two houses constituting a block so precisely similar in architecture and build that one can be detected from the other only by the numbers above the doors. It seems that Saturday evening, after partaking of tea, our social merchant left home to meet a party of country friends at the Southern and pass a pleasant evening. Workmen had been engaged that day in repairing the water-pipes at his house, and when he last noticed the hose-plug at the edge of the sidewalk was open. During his absence the workmen had completed the job at the house, and moved next door. When they knocked off for the night, they left the hose-plug open before the other door, just as our merchant had noticed the one in front of his residence.

At the Southern, the hours sped on rosy wings. After spending an hour at De Bar's, the party visited several fashionable saloons, and then returned to the hotel, where wine was imbibed, jokes cracked, and songs sung until "the wee sma' hours ayant the twal." At length, when the small hours were pealing from the tall bellfries, our friend started for his home. Obfusticated he certainly was, or he would not have located his house by the hose-plug, instead of the number. His latch-key fitted the lock, the stairway was all right, even the bed-room was in the proper location. His wife was snoring, oblivious of the ills of life or the absent husband. Noiselessly he disrobed, quietly he slipped into bed, and soon was snoring a nasal base to the lady's nasal tenor. At length, 'the morning light was breaking,' and the lady was the first to awaken. Her astonished eyes opened on the well-known face of her—neighbor. Being a sensible woman, she did not scream and rave, and rouse the neighborhood, and thus furnish a choice morsel of food for scandal. Oh, no! she caught him by the shoulders, and shaking him until he was fully aroused, quietly observed:

"Mr. ——, isn't there some mistake? Haven't you got into the wrong bed?"

Poor ——'s eyes almost popped from his head, so greatly was he astonished.

He commenced stammering an apology, an excuse—something or other, he had no idea whot he was saying—and backed out of the bed.

The lady turned her face to the wall, and allowed him an opportunity to dress and take his departure.

She explained to him, while he was resuming his clothes, that her husband was absent in the western part of the State—a fact of which he was already aware—but was to have come in on the morning train of the Pacific road. She had sat up waiting for him until long after train time, and on his not arriving had retired and slept unusually sound in consequence of her unwonted vigil. After many apologies and many expressions of his humiliation and shame, our friend backed out of the room and house, and entered his own domicil. How he bamboozled his wife with a story of being on the committee for the visitation of the sick of his lodge, and being compelled to pass a night by the bedside of a sick brother, he can tell much better over a glass of sparkling Moselle than we can possibly write. The story is literally true, and will be readily recognized by the parties to it, and the small coterie of spirits who are cognizant of it, and from whose jovial bantering of the unlucky —— we gathered it from.

☞ "Shut your eyes and listen mit me," said Uncle Van Heyde. "Vell, de first night I opens store I counts de monies, and finds him nix right, I count him and dere be tree dollar gone, and vot does yer tink I does den?" "I can't say." "Vy, I did not count him any more, and he come out shoost right ever since."

☞ "Well, madam, how's your husband to-day?"

"Why, doctor, he is no better."

"Did you get the leeches?"

"Yes; but he only took three of them raw; I had to fry the rest!"

How to Preserve the Teeth.

"Cleanse your teeth once or oftener every day. Always cleanse them before retiring at night. Always pick the teeth and rinse the mouth after eating. 'Cleansing the teeth,' consists in thoroughly removing every particle of foreign substance from around the teeth and gums. To cleanse, use well made brushes, soft quill or wooden tooth picks, and precipitated chalk. If these means fail apply to a reliable dentist. Always roll the brush up and down lengthwise of the teeth, by which means you avoid injuring the gums and necks of the teeth, and more thoroughly cleanse between them. Never use a dentrifice containing acid, alkali, charcoal, soap, salt, or any gritty or powfully detersive substance. Powders and pastes generally are objectionable. They injure the gums and soft parts of the teeth, and greatly assist in forming tartar. A wash, properly medicated and carefully prepared, is pleasanter and more beneficial. It dissolves the injurious secretions and deposits, and the whole is readily removed with the brush and water. Avoid eating hot food. Thoroughly masticate and insalivate the food before swallowing it. Frequent indulgence in sweetmeats, &c., between regular meals, disturbs the process of digestion, and a viscid secretion is deposited in the mouth (from the stomach) which is very injurious to the teeth. Parents, carefully attend to your children's 'second dentition.' Gently prevail upon them, at an early age, to visit, at frequent intervals, a careful and skillful operator. Remember that four of the permanent 'double teeth' come in at about the age of six years. They are very liable to decay early; are very large, and should never be allowed to require extracting. Again, children do not shed their teeth as they did in former ages. Instead of being trained to masticate nutritious food, they are tempted with, and allowed to gulp down delicacies, hot cakes, hot beverages, &c. Thus by depriving the teeth of their natural functions and overtasking the stomach, a morbid condition of the general system is procured; the first teeth are prematurely decayed, and the permanent set are not matured at the proper period of dentition. The consequences are terrible. Never allow any one to extract a tooth, or to dissuade you from having them filled, unless absolutely necessary. Many so-called dentists, actuated by selfish motives, advise extracting and sacrificing many teeth which competent operators can render serviceable for many years. Carelessness and procrastination are responsible for a large majority of teeth which are lost.

Does it Pay to Grow Raspberries.

To show whether it does pay to grow raspberries or not, I will give the yield from half an acre grown the past season. The plot contained originally 727 plants, of which number from 30 to 60 were killed out the first year by hilling up. The soil was composed of yellow sand and a loamy, heavy sand, with a clay bottom, on part of the plot; the variety, Seneca Black Cap. There were picked for market over forty bushels of berries, which sold for over four dollars a bushel, besides several bushels of which no account was mada. What were picked for market were grown where it was sandy bottom.

On the clay bottom there were from 20 to 30 bushels of berries which were left unpicked from being so dried up as to be worthless. There was not enough rain, but once, after they had blossomed, to reach half way down to the roots; but with the lack of moisture had the plot been thoroughly cultivated, the loss of berries would have been small, but there was nothing done to them after they were hilled up in the spring.

No one need expect to grow good crops of berries without giving them attention. In a favorable season, with proper cultivation, one hundred bushels of berries can be grown on the same plot where only a little over forty bushels were sold this year. If any one doubts that the above yield can be grown on half an acre, I would advise them to visit different growers and see the different crops, and I think they will have then all doubts removed.

But such yields are not required to make it pay. Even fifty bushels per acre pays a great deal better than a crop of corn. But every one who has a rod of land should raise enough for home use.—Practical Farmer.

Right Sentiments.

The following letter, from the Hon. Salmon P. Chase will find a responsive echo in the breasts of all who favor a union of "hearts and hands" as well as a union of States:

CHARLESTON, S. C., May 29, 1869.

Dear Sir: Your note inviting me to attend the ceremony of decorating at Magnolia Cemetery the graves of the brave men who fell in defense of the Union during the recent civil war only reached me this morning. I am very sorry that I cannot be with you on this most interesting occasion; but it is now too late to make the necessary arrangements.

The nation cannot too tenderly cherish the memory of her dead heroes, or too watchfully guard the well-being of those who survive. And may we not indulge the hope that ere long we who adhered to the National cause will be prompt also to join in commemorating the heroism of our countrymen who fell on the other side, and that those who now specially mourn their loss, consenting to the arbitrament of arms and resuming all their old love for their country and our country, one and indivisible, will join with us in like commemoration of the fallen brave of the army of the Union?

The dead are not dead. They have only gone before, and now see eye to eye. Why may not we all borrow from their sacred graves oblivion of past differences, and henceforth unite in noble and generous endeavor to assure the honor and welfare of our whole country, of all her States, and of all her citizens.

Very respectfully, yours,

S. P. CHASE.
