The Soul's Farewell to the Body.

Companion dear! the hour draws nigh,
The sentence speeds, to die, to die!
So long in mystic union held,
So close with strong embrace compelled,
How canst thou bear the dread decree
That strikes thy clasping nerves from me?

Well hast thou in my service wrought;
Thy brow hath mirrored forth my thought,
To wear my smile thy lips have glowed,
Thy tear to speak my sorrows flowed;
Thine ear hath borne me rich supplies
Of richly varied melodies;
Thy hands my prompted deeds have done,
Thy feet upon my errands run;
Yes, thou hast marked my bidding well,
Faithful and true! farewell, farewell!

Yet we shall meet. To soothe thy pain,
Remember, we shall meet again.
Quell with this hope the victor's sting,
And keep it as a signet-ring,
When the dire worm shall pierce thy breast,
And naught but ashes mark thy rest;
When stars shall fall, and skies grow dark,
And proud suns quench their glow-worm spark,
Keep thou this hope to light thy gloom,
Till the last trumpet rends the tomb.
Then shalt thou glorious rise, and fair,
Nor spot nor stain nor wrinkle bear,
And I with hovering wing elate,
The bursting of thy bonds shall wait,
And breathe the welcome of the sky,
"No more to part, no more to die,—
Co-heir of immortality."

Simon Short's Son, Samuel.

The following literary curiosity was constructed for the last number of the Aspirant, the reading of which formed a part of the closing exercises of the Concord, N. H., High School. The writer is Miss Ida Bennett. Alliterated stories have been written before; but we do not remember to have seen one in which the difficult letter s was carried so far:

Shrewd Simon Short sewed shoes. Seventeen summers, speeding storms, spreading sunshine, successively saw Simon's small shabby shop still standing stanch, saw Simon's self-same squeaking sign still swinging, specifying: "Simon Short, Smithfield's sole surviving shoemaker. Shoes sewed, soled superfinely." Simon's spry, sedulous spouse, Sally Short, sewed shirts, stitched sheets, stuffed sofas. Simon's six stout, sturdy sons—Seth, Samuel, Stephen, Saul, Shadrack, Silas—sold sundries: sober Seth sold sugar, starch, spice; simple Sam sold saddles, stirrups, screws; sagacious Stephen sold silks, satins, shawls; skeptical Saul sold silver salvers; selfish Shadrach sold salves, shoestrings, soap, saws, skates; slack Silas sold Sally Short's stuffed sofas.

Some seven summers since, Simon's second son Samuel saw Sophia Sophronia Spriggs somewhere. Sweet, sensible, smart Sophia Sophronia Spriggs. Sam soon showed strange symptoms. Sam seldom stayed, storing, selling saddles. Sam sighed sorrowfully, sought Sophia Sophronia's society, sung several serenades slyly. Simon stormed, scolded severely, said Sam seemed so silly, singing such shameful senseless songs. "Strange, Sam should slight such splendid summersales! Strutting spendthrift! shatter-brained simpleton!"

"Softly, softly, sire," said Sally. "Sam's smitten, Sam's spied some sweetheart."

"Sentimental school-boy," snarled Simon. "Smitten! Stop such stuff!" Simon sent Sally's snuff-box spinning, seized Sally's scissors, smashed Sally's spectacles, scattering several spools. "Sneaking scoundrel! Sam's silliness shall surcease!" Scowling, Simon stopped speaking, starting swiftly forward. Sally sighed sadly. Summoning Sam, she spoke sweet sympathy. "Sam," she said "sire singularly snappy; so sonny, stop strolling streets, stop smoking segars, spending specie superfluously, stop sprucing so, stop singing serenades, stop short. Sell saddles, sonny, sell saddles sensible; see Sophia Sophronia Spriggs soon; she's sprightly, she's stable, so solicit, sue, secure Sophia speedily, Sam."

"So soon? So soon?" said Sam, standing stock still.

"So soon, surely," said Sally, smiling, "specially since sire shows such spirits."

"So Sam, somewhat scared, sauntered slowly, shaking stupendously. Sam soliloquises: 'Sophia Sophoronia Spriggs. Spriggs—Short—Sophia. Sopronia Short. Samuel Short's spouse—sounds splendid! Suppose she should say—. Sho! she shant! she shant!"

Soon Sam spied Sophia starching shirts, singing softly. Seeing Sam, she stopped starching, saluted Sam smilingly. Sam stammered shockingly.

"Spl-spl-splendid summer season, Sophia."

"Somewhat sultry," suggested Sophia. "Sar-sar-sartin, Sophia," said Sam. (Silence seventeen seconds.)

"Selling saddles still, Sam?"

"Sar-sar-sartin," said Sam starting suddenly. "Season's somewhat sudorific," said Sam, stealthily staunching streaming sweat, shaking sensibly.

"Sartin," said Sophia, smiling significantly. "Sip some sweet sherbet, Sam." (Silence sixty seconds.)

"Sire shot sixty sheldrakes, Saturday," said Sophia.

"sixty? sho!" said Sam. (Silence seventy-seven seconds.)

"See sister Susan's sunflowers," said Sophia, sociably scattering such stiff silence.

Sophia's sprightly sauciness stimulated Sam strangely; so Sam suddenly spoke sentimentally. "Sophia, Susan's sunflowers seem saying, Samuel Short, Sophia Sophronia Spriggs, stroll serenely, seek some sequestered spot, some sylvan shade. Sparkling springs shall sing soul-soothing strains, sweet songsters shall silence secret sighings; super-angelic sylphs shall"——. Sophia snickered; so Sam stopped.

"Sophia," said Sam, solemnly.

"Sam," said Sophia.

"Sophia, stop smiling. Sam Short's sincere. Sam's seeking some sweet spouse, Sophia?"

Sophia stood silent.

"Speak! Sophia, speak; such suspense speculates sorrow."

"Seek sire, Sam, seek sire."

So Sam sought sire Spriggs. Sire Spriggs said "Sartin."

Flirtation.

It takes two to make a flirtation, it must be remembered; and the ordinary practice of society—to blame the girl whenever a flirtation-copartnership is broken up—constantly produces cases of great hardship. Why must it necessarily be the girl that is in the wrong? At present, flirtation is accepted as a fashionable amusement. It is far more interesting than bezique; it is not limited by conditions of time and place, like croquet; and it has just that spice of danger which heightens one's enjoyment of any pastime. When two charming young creatures begin to flirt with each other, don't they know perfectly what they are about? Falling seriously in love is quite another matter, and is known by its very different symptoms.

There is a fine, airy, theatrical appearance about a flirtation which the more solemn business of love-making invariably lacks. A true lover fears to mention his mistress' name. He is half afraid, lest his secret should be known to herself. He is silent. He is moody, and given to long and vacant staring at the table-cover or carpet. He secretly watches the too-sweet face which has enthrailed him; and he has a terrible inward qualm when her eye catches his. He is miserable when he is beside her; he is unutterly wretched when he is away from her. The stars are his confidants; he abhors the faces of men, and turns away in disgust from the smoking-room of his club. But the man who is only carrying on a flirtation is a very different creature. He plays at making love in a serio-comic manner which is meant to be amusing. He is great in the matter of compliments. He is easy in manner, jocular, and occasionally (with such brains as Providence has given him) even witty. With him the tragedy of love making is turned into a clever burlesque, with plenty of light, brilliant dresses, good music and merriment.

Diamond Dust.

If thou hast wit and learning, add to it.

Small and steady gains give competency with tranquility of mind.

Avoid Temptation, through fear you may not withstand it.

The uninstructed mind resembles the unpolished diamond.

It is the depth of study, not the extent of it, that gives intellectual power.

The noblest power of nature stands in need of the nuturing hand of education.

It is hard to acquire knowledge, harder to retain it, still more difficult to put it into practice, and, hardest of all, not to be proud of.

Hope awakens courage, while despondency is the last of all evils; it is the battle of life with dead nothingness.

Euripides was wont to say silence was an answer to a wise man; but we seem to have greater occasion for it in our dealings with fools and unreasonable persons; for men of breeding and sense will be satisfied with reason and fair words.

A youth who starts out in life with an earnest determination to be honest, upright, faithful to all trusts, punctual, attentive, and, above all, God fearing, has a promise of abundant success. Though he be without money, or wealthy friends, he will be sure to gain all that he most desires.

Virtue is the humble violet nestled away under its broad, green leaves, over whose head the storms of adversity may pass in safety; vice, the gaudy, poisonous flower, one moment flaunting in fancied security, the next crushed to the earth by some gust of passion, to be trampled upon and neglected, even by those who admire its dangerous beauty. Virtue is the brightest, vice the blackest, thread in the web of life.

Five Cents worth of Orange Peel.

A man from the country invested five cents in the purchase of an orange, and preparatory to getting himself outside of it, threw the peel on the sidewalk. Soon after a young woman came along, slipped upon the peel, and fell, breaking her leg. The woman was to have been married the next day, but wasn't. The man who was to marry her had come from St. Paul, Minn., and was obliged to return, on account of business, to await the recovery of the girl. On his way back he unfortunately took a train on the Erie railroad, which ran off the track, and his shoulder blade was broken, forcing him to stop at Dunkirk for repairs. The Travelers' Insurance Company, in which he was insured, had to pay $250 in weekly instalments before he recovered. On getting back to St. Paul he found that his forced absence had upset a business arrangement which he had expected to complete, at a pecuniary loss to him of $5,000. Meantime the injured girl suffered a relapse, which so enfeebled her health that her marriage was delayed, which had a bad effect upon the young man, and he finally broke the engagement and married a widow in Minnesota with four small children. This so worked upon the mind of the girl, that she is now in the insane hospital in Middletown. Her father, outraged by the conduct of the young man, brought a suit for breach of promise and has just recovered $10,000. The anxiety and expense of the whole affair thus far have been enormous, as anybody can see.—Similar cases are likely to occur so long as people will persist in throwing orange peel around loose.—Hartford Courant.

Recipe for Making Tattlers.

Take a handful of the weed called run-about, the same quantity of root called Nimble-tongue, a sprig of the herb Backbite, (either before or after dog-days,) a table-spoonful of Dont-you-tell-it, six drachms of Malice, a few drops of Envy, which can be purchased in any quantity at the shops of Miss Tabitha Tea-table and Miss Nancy Night-walker. Stir them well together, and simmer them for half an hour over the fire of discontent, kindled with a little jealousy, then strain it through the rag of Misconception, and cork it up in the bottle of Malevolence and hang upon a skein of Street Yarn; shake it occasionally for a few days, and it will be fit for use. Let a few drops be taken before walking out, and the subject will be enabled to speak all manner of evil and that continually.
