WOMAN'S WORK.

Darning little stockings
For restless little feet;
Washing little faces,
To keep them fresh and sweet;
Hearing Bible lessons,
Teaching catechism,
Praying for salvation
From heresy and schism,
Woman's work.

Sewing on the buttons,
Overseeing rations,
Soothing with a kind word
Others' lamentations;
Guiding clumsy Bridgets,
Coaxing sullen looks,
Entertaining company
And reading recent books,
Woman's work.

Burying out of sight
Her own unhealing smarts;
Letting in the sunshine
On other clouded hearts;
Binding up the wounded,
Healing of the sick,
Bravely marching onward
Through danger dark and thick,
Woman's work.

Leading little children
And blessing manhood's years;
Showing to the sinful
How God's forgiveness cheers;
Scattering sweet roses
Along another's path;
Smiling by the wayside,
Content with what she hath,
Woman's work.

Letting fall her own tears
Where only God can see;
Wiping off another's
With tender sympathy;
Learning by experience,
Teaching by example;
Yearning by the gateway,
Golden, pearly, ample,
Woman's work.

At last cometh silence—
A day of deep repose;
Her locks smoothly braided,
Upon her breast a rose;
Lashes resting gently
Upon the marble cheek;
A look of blessed peace
Upon the forehead meek.

Her hands softly folded,
The kind pulse is still;
The cold lips know no smile
The noble heart no thrill;
Her pillow needs no smoothing,
She craveth for no care—
Love's tenderest entreaty
Wakes no responses there,

A grave in the valley,
Tears, bitter sobs, regret,
Another lesson taught,
That life may not forget;
A face forever hidden,
A race forever run;
"Dust to dust," the preacher saith,
And woman's work is done.

How the Atlantic Cable is Worked.

We find the following interesting account of the working of the Atlantic cable in a recent lecture by the Hon. Wm. J. McAlpine, on the subject of "Modern Engineering:"

Telegraphy may, with propriety, be considered one of the branches of engineering, and is peculiarly of modern development. A clever writer says that it may be read by each of the five senses. On land lines each signal is made by suspending the flow of the electric current for two different intervals of time called "dots and dashes"—the use of which, in different orders, constitutes the alphabet of the telegraph. When these are printed they are read by "sight," but ordinarily the operator reads them by "sound" as easily as a musician reads the letters of the scale by the same sense. If the operator has no instrument, he will grasp the wire in his hand and read the signals by "feeling" the intermissions of the flow of the electric current. In like manner, by placing the wire across the tongue he can "taste" the same intermission, but this is a dangerous experiment. And it is said that the electricity can be made to dissolve a chemical and produce a pungent odor in the telegraphic alphabet, which can be read by "smelling," but for this I do not vouch. I believe that the method of signalizing through the Atlantic cable is known in detail to but few persons. The operation is exactly reversed from that of the land wires.

The gutta-percha covering of the copper wires, under the pressure of a great depth of water, becomes an absorbent of the electricity which is being sent through them to the extent of 90 per cent. The first portion of the electric wave of 10 per cent. crosses the ocean (1,700 miles) in two seconds, and it would be followed by a succession of waves from the restoration of that portion of the electricity which has been absorbed by the gutta-percha in impulses, and the signal would be repeated like echoes, and produce not only confusion, but great delay. To remedy this Professor Varly introduced a key, which sends alternate currents, positive and negative, at such intervals as allow the first wave of 10 per cent. to pass forward, and then that portion absorbed by the covering is neutralized by its opposite, and the cable is cleared for the transmission of a second pair of currents. The battery used is a very small one, (three of Daniel's cups,) and the signal being 10 per cent. of this small current, is powerless to move any of the other instruments in use on land. The instrument used consits of a minute polarized needle, suspended on a single strand of a spider's web, or one from the silk-worm. In the middle of this minute needle is placed an almost microscopic mirror, which reflects a single ray of light from a powerful lamp.

The currents of electricity affect this needle alternately to the right and left for a space of time corresponding to that occupied in the signal of the land line, the same kind of alphabet being used in both cases. The receiver (not operator) sits in a dark room, and the small mirror reflects the ray of light upon a piece of white paper before him, on which a black line is drawn, to the right and left of which the light is alternately reflected. The receiver reads these signals by "sight," and transmits them to another person, placed outside of the dark room, by means of an ordinary instrument.

A short time since, General Reynolds told me that he had sent a message, without either wire or cable, ninety-two miles across an arm of Lake Superior, by means of the heliotrope or mirror, and on the return of his messenger, who had been sent with a written copy, he found that the heliotrope message had been received, understood and obeyed.

He had two assistants, who had been telegraphic operators, who had for a whole summer been amusing themselves in talking to each other with these instruments, though they were stationed ten, twenty, or thirty miles apart. When the Confederate Gen. Morgan made his great raid through Indiana and Ohio he captured one of my operators, and compelled him to telegraph, in Gen. Lew Wallace's name, to Cincinnati, asking how many regular troops were in that city. Morgan read by "sound," and therefore the operator did not dare to intimate that he was under duress, and could only venture to add an extra initial to his own signatures. The receiving operator at Cincinnati knew that Morgan was in that neighborhood, and suspecting, from the extra initial letter that all was not right, replied, greatly exaggerating the force of regulars, and the consequence was that Morgan changed his route to a circuit twenty miles beyond the city, and thus saved it from a sack, and the probable loss of millions of dollars.

"Feeing" Hotel Waiters.

For years past we have been opposed to the custom of "feeing" waiters at public hotels, for two reasons, Firstly, it depletes one's pocket; secondly, it causes the waiters to become exacting and impudent, especially if they are not the recipients of "stamps" when one leaves the table.

After mature thought, deep meditation and prayerful consideration, we discovered, about a year since, a panacea for this crying evil, and, before "our sands of life run out," we propose to impart it to an afflicted traveling community—gratis.

When traveling—and we are most of the time on the wing—we carry three newspapers in our pocket, to wit: The N. Y. Tribune, N. Y. Day-Book and N. Y. World. These are the cicerones to prevent us from being imposed upon by exacting waiters. Our modus operandi is as follows:

We enter the dining-room of a hotel where we see that the waiters are "colored men and brethren." Upon taking our seat—before glancing at the bill of fare—we draw the Tribune from our pocket. In a moment five or six sable sons of Africa are behind our chair, only too willing to do themselves the honor of waiting upon us, and as we know they would consider it an insult should we proffer them a shinplaster quarter when leaving the table, we decline to wound the sensibilities of our colored brethren.

The next day we "turn up" at a hotel where the waiters are from the Green Isle. Here we haul from our pocket the N. Y. Day-Book. In a moment Pat, Mike, the O'Donohue, &c., are at our side, and we are attended to like a lord from "Erin Go Braugh." Of course we don't insult our Celtic friends by offering them greenbacks, although they are from the Green Isle!

At the next hotel we visit, the color of the waiters is so mixed, that, for the life of us, we can't decide whether they are white or black. Here the N. Y. World comes into play, and it works like a charm. Every attention is paid us; we save our stamps, and, as we leave the table, we hear the exclamation—"He's one of us; he's a dyed in the wool hybrid."

With careful usage—and we travel considerably—the copies of the papers last us some three months, accidents excepted, one of which we met with at the Delevan House, in Albany, a few days ago.

At that admirably-conducted hotel the waiters are negroes. On taking our seat at the table, we drew from our pocket what we intended to be the Tribune, when, on opening it, we found it to be the Day-Book! We turned to the "cullud pusson" behind our chair, and exclaimed, "D—n the scoundrel who poked that 'copperhead' paper in my pocket; take it away, I would not handle it with a pair of tongs; I have the Tribune here," and, as we drew it from our pocket, our sable friend exclaimed, "Sah, will you have soup?—you shall have the best of everything the house affords." We did not fee that waiter.

Let others lay our experience to heart, and save their stamps!

An Enormous Hog.

The local columns of the Sun, in February last, contained an account of a hog raised in Harford county, in this State, which, when slaughtered, weighed 734 pounds. This mammoth porker was exhibited gratuitously near the Lexington market, and attracted a large number of visitors. But Maryland has been outstripped by Los Angelos, California. There is a hog in that county of the Irish grazier breed, now three and a-half years old, which measures nine feet from the tip of the tail, forty inches in height, and is as thick through as an ox. The breed grows till five years of age, and there is no saying what the weight of this will be should it live to the age named. A year and a-half ago it weighed 750 pounds. Now it is estimated to weigh about 1,250 pounds.

THAT was a shrewd girl, and not devoid of sense, either, who remarked, when other girls were making fun of her short skirts, and affected to be much shocked at the exhibition thereof at a party, "If you'd only pull up your dresses about your necks, where they ought to be, they'd be as short as mine!" She was not troubled any more.

☞ The most bashful girl we ever knew was one who blushed when asked if she had not been courting sleep.
