The Coal Trade---The Prospect of Supply and Prices.

In addition to the article copied yesterday (says the Baltimore Sun of Thursday) from the Philadelphia Ledger on this subject, the following, from the Engineering and Mining Journal of New York, gives further information, indicating that the late protracted strike of the miners has been more or less successful in its object—that is, the cutting off any overplus of supply and securing, for the time, a consequent advance of prices:

"The market has become quiet and settled, now that we are producing our usual full supply of coal, excepting only some 40,000 tons per week each from the mines of the two companies whose men have not yet resumed work. There is no great rush of out-of-town dealers for a supply, and the demand for city trade may be termed light. Coal has, however, advanced, both at wholesale and retail; and what were considered fancy prices two or three weeks ago are now accepted as regular by the trade—namely, Lehigh, from 6 75a$7 75, alongside; Schuylkill, 7a $7 50, on board. The Reading railroad has taken off the drawbacks on all coal shipped east of New Brunswick, and the canal has advanced toll. This is one reason for the advance in prices. Another is, that as the season advances the time during which coal can be transported by canal is shortened. All demands cannot be supplied at once, and thus the demand becomes greater than the supply, hence an advance in prices ensues. It was at this time last year that the strike on the "eight-hour law" took place throughout the region. This strike lasted seven weeks, and during that period our statistics show that some 1,444,000 tons of coal reached tidewater. Estimating the capacity of production for the next seven weeks, (leaving out the two companies on a strike now,) it may safely be stated that the supply will reach 300,000 tons per week, or a total for seven weeks of 2,100,000 tons. Therefore, for seven weeks from July 3d, 1869, we shall have 656,000 tons more on hand that in 1868, less the present decrease on account of the strike just ended of 565,077 tons, which will leave about 100,000 tons increase this year over last on August 22d. Now, to all who know that the annual increase of the consumption of coal is about ten per cent. per annum, it will be apparent that we shall be in actual deficit all of 500,000 tons August 22d next. Truly, with these figures staring us in the face, the prospects for cheap coal this winter is not very favorable. We advised dealers two weeks ago to come to market and buy their coal when it was $1 per ton cheaper than it is now. We urge them to give their orders now, and yet save $1 per ton. The fact is, everybody will, in a short time, want to be supplied at once, and, as it is impossible to do this, prices during the excitement will range higher. Don't forget the lesson learned in 1868."

Pennsylvania State Democratic Convention.

HARRISBURG, July 14.

The Democratic State Convention which met here to-day, nominated Asa Packer on the second ballot for Governor.

The committee on resolutions made a report. The resolutions, as reported, declare against the exercise of doubtful constitutional power—that Pennsylvania never would give up self-government—that the ratification of the fifteenth amendment should go before the people; that the negro should not have the ballot; that the finances need reform; that labor reforms should be encouraged; that the whole reconstruction policy tends to destroy Republican government and establish tyranny; that our soldiers should not be forgotten; that our sympathies should be given to nations struggling for liberty; that our system of taxation is burdensome, and should be done away with.

The report was unanimously accepted amid some cheering. Hancock's name was received with vociferous applause by the spectators.

A letter from the General, dated May 21, positively prohibiting the use of his name, was read, but several declared a determination to vote for him in spite of it.

The result of the first ballot was as follows: Packer 58, Hancock 22, Cass 48, Gen. McCandless 5.

Second ballot.—Packer 68, Cass 47, Hancock 19. Packer was declared the nominee.

The New York Amended Constitution.

The amended constitution of the State of New York, adopted by the convention held last winter in Albany, is to be voted on by the people at the general election to be held on the first Tuesday of next November. The constitution is not to be voted on as an entire instrument, but each citizen may cast four ballots, to wit: For or against the amended constitution; the judiciary article; the uniform rule of assessment and taxation of real and personal property; and the property qualification of colored men. The constitution is published in the newspapers, and fills six columns of the Journal of Commerce.

A REMARKABLE STATEMENT.—An exchange says: "A Mrs. Park celebrated her one hundred and fifth birthday lately at Cleveland, Ohio. She has raised seventeen children. The last was born when she was sixty-five years old, and she now enjoys good health, attends church regularly, is active, has good teeth and improved sight, and her hair is turning black. But she has an internal cancer of fifty years' standing.

Walker's majority in Virginia, by the latest returns, is 19,763.

PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.—We are indebted to Senator Vickers for a copy of the Congressional Globe for the Second Session of the Fortieth Congress United States Senate, comprised in six volumes and including Parts I, II, III and IV, the Globe and Appendix, and the Globe supplement.

MR. JAMES HARPER GALE will accept thanks for a basket of very nice Pears. We are not familiar with the variety, but can testify to their quality.

THAT OLD GOOSE.

Mr. Editor—It has become my melancholy duty to announce to you the sad end of one of the old inhabitants of our State; "Aunt Sally," the oldest member of the Goose family, who some time since, on account of her venerable age and respectability, received honorable mention in your columns. As you are well aware, the members of this ancient family are held in high respect on account of having once by their prowess (combined with remarkable musical abilities) delivered a city. And then, where is the laughing maiden or romping urchin whose eyes have not danced to the musical cadences of "Mother Goose's Melodies," the author of which poetical effusions is supposed to be a near relative of the subject of this notice. But this is not all the world owes to the descendants of the defenders of Rome. How much does literature, poetry, history, science and religion owe to the Gooses. O, ye knights of the quill, weep for poor Aunt Sally! This "old goose" (we use the language respectfully) commenced life three-quarters of a century ago, on the farm of the late Mr. Samuel Hodges, in Kent county, Md. She remained in the family of Mr Hodges for fifty years, and was then transferred to the care of Mr. Merritt Miller, a nephew of Mr. Hodges. In this family she continued until her death, which occurred on the farm of Mrs. J. M. Page, a daughter of Mr. Miller. During the latter years of her life, Aunt Sally had become very feeble and quite blind; but still indulged in most of the ordinary occupations and amusements of goose life. Being, we are sorry to say, not without some of the peculiar weaknesses characteristic of her race, she wandered unattended, from her green lawn to the barn yard, where an uncouth, uncultivated personage named Mr. Ox held dominion. Goose-like, she trusted herself too near his boots, when this awkward individual stepped on her and broke her leg. She was immediately carried to the house, where her broken limb was carefully set, but she picked off the bandages, refused the surgeon's skill, and, after lingering in a disconsolate and semi-torpid state for a week; on the fourteenth of June, 1869, it became apparent that her days were numbered. Kind friends gathered mournfully about her and did all in their power to alleviate her suffering; but, after a few convulsive gasps, she passed away, at the ripe old age of seventy-five years, lamented by all who knew her; their chief regret being that she was not permitted to live out the full measure of her days and die a natural death. A suitable box was prepared, and Aunt Sally was decently interred.

EGLANTINE.

The Will of the Man who loved the Stars and Stripes.

Jacob Foss, a native of Cornish, N. H., and for several years a citizen of Charlestown, Mass., at his death, in 1865, bequeathed a portion of his large estate to the support of those things calculated to keep alive and aglow the love of country and its glory within the hearts of his townsmen. Besides giving to Charlestown several thousand dollars to be expended in United States flags, in the celebration of the Fourth of July, and in perpetuating the name of the old hero, Andrew Jackson, he gave the sum of $1,000 to the town of Cornish, with the direction that it be kept at interest, and that the annual increase thereby be expended in the purchase and erection of flags. No mottoes are to be emblazoned on these flags, nor are they to be used for party purposes, but on all important occasions of a national character they are to be hoisted to the breeze and kept flying. Mr. J. M. Davidson, a citizen of Cornish and the trustee of this fund, purchased and erected a flag from the same on the Fourth of July, 1868, at Cornish Flat, which cost $80, and this year one at Cornish Centre, which cost $40. In a few years this fortunate town will have sufficient stars and stripes to be worthy of a learned disquisition upon the same by its distinguished son, Chief Justice S. P. Chase.—Boston Herald.

The Great Influx of Chinese into California.

The Alta Californian, of a recent date, has an article on the subject of Chinese immigration, which taken in connection with the Chinese Labor Convention, now in session at Memphis, possesses more than usual interest. The Alta says:

"When we reflect upon the vast accession which our population has received in fifty years from Ireland and Germany, in spite of all obstacles, pecuniary and political, and consider that the great administrative faculties of the Chinese has already, in connection with the steamship company, organized an efficient and effective system under protection of a United States treaty, which can draw upon twenty times the population for supplies; that there is an eager demand for the immigrant in all parts of the Union, with no opposition but from an insignificant local prejudice, we may understand that the great migration of the century has but now commenced."

The San Francisco Dispatch thinks this is a remarkably frank expression, and says:

"Heretofore it has been denied that the Chinese were likely to increase in numbers to any appreciable extent. The people were told that they were returning home about as fast as they came, and hence all alarm on the subject was quite unnecessary. This was done to quiet popular discontent, but all the while plans have been perfecting to stimulate immigration from that source, and introduce those people as a permanent element in our population. In less than ten years the immigration from Asia will exceed anything experienced in modern times. The influx from the British Isles and Germany for fifty years has only been a little more than six millions, and yet it is considered as enormous. It was a heavy draught upon a population of fifty millions, but it is nothing compared to what will flow in from China with its great hive of 450,000,000 of people.

Mr. George Peabody and His second Gift to the South.

The New Bedford Mercury of July 7th, says Mr. George Peabody's second gift to promote education in the Southern States is even greater than it had stated it to be, and adds:

"Besides the valuable stocks, worth more than a million of dollars, he adds $384,000 in Florida bonds, which will ultimately be paid, and will swell the amount of his gifts to this one object to nearly $4,000,000. The letter to the trustees, advising them of this new gift was written by Mr. Peabody himself, and shows the clearness and vigor of his intellect, notwithstanding the fact that he is suffering from a disease of a serious nature, painful and prostrating, and which, he is conscious, must before long terminate his life. The interview between the great philanthropist, lying upon his sick bed, and the distinguished gentlemen who have so wisely administered his magnificent charity was an exceedingly affecting one.

"A description of it, and particularly of Mr. Peabody's remarks, not only in regard to the educational scheme and what he expects to result from it, but in relation to the war would intensify the public regard for him, not only as one of the greatest benefactors, but as one of the purest of patriots—never for a moment faltering in his allegiance to the government, though never forgotting that the North and South constitute one country. He will not live to see the full fruits of his noble charity. But the great banker, in his best days, never embarked in a scheme more certain of success or promising more magnificent returns. His educational fund is accomplishing and will consummate what changes of the constitution could never effect, the existence of real and abiding peace between the North and South.

"Mr. Peabody, we learn, designs to administer upon his own estate. Death will find him possessed of only means sufficient for a becoming burial. He will leave nothing for heirs to quarrel about. His vast estate will not be tied up in chancery, at the instigation of some avaricious heir at law, to the sore disappointment and suffering of needy beneficiaries. He will finish his good work."

The Usurious Brokers--Several Parties Indicted.

The New York Commercial of Tuesday says:

"The excitement among the brokers in Broad and Wall streets, growing out of the action of the district attorney in summoning a large number of the leading brokers, stock-operators, railroad directors, bank presidents, cashiers and others before the grand jury, continues to be the engrossing subject on the street, in the banks' back parlors and on the stock exchange. To-day the grand jury were in session, and had before them several of the leading brokers and bank presidents. The head of one of the leading banks in the city, when asked if he had at any time exacted more than the regular rate of interest, promptly and unblushing responded that he had done so frequently. One of the jurors inquired if he was not aware that in doing so he violated the law; he answered that he was, but that everybody seemed to regard the law as a dead letter. This admission ought to place the bank president in danger of being indicted for taking usurious interest. It is evident that the grand jury have taken up the consideration of a matter which will occupy their time for several days, and the result of their investigation will be locked for with much interest. It is understood that indictments have been found against moneylending brokers and bankers, and that the papers are being prepared and arrests will be made to-morrow and the indicted parties brought before the court. The jury, it is understood is to pursue the investigation, and many others may be expected to be indicted."

Call to a Minister.

Serving in Co. E, 1st Maryland Confederate Cavalry, was Captain Wm. I. Rasin, and a more gallant young officer never set a squadron in the field. At the time Milroy was driven out of the Valley, Captain Rasin was a prisoner in the Hospital at Winchester, having previously been severely wounded in the head. At this time, his recovery was considered extremely doubtful.

Just before the Federal troops evacuated, the Rev. Mr. Harvey, Chaplain to the 110th Ohio Volunteers, went to the bedside of Captain Rasin, and bent over him tenderly, and among other questions, asked him "if he was prepared to meet his God." Rasin made a faint reply that he thought he had done his duty and had but little dread of the future. At the same time the reverend gentleman concluded to act as custodian of the gallant young officer's personal effects, such as his gold watch, a set of shirt-studs, and several dollars in silver. Without wishing to cast any reproach upon the motives of the good man, and to give him an opportunity to render unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, this article is written. The editor of this paper would be happy to assist the Rev. Mr. Harvey in restoring the property mentioned to its rightful owner. Will our Ohio exchanges assist us in laying this statement before the reverend gentleman, and will he profit by the intelligence?—Pomeroy's Democrat.

HEALTH OF JEFFERSON DAVIS.—Mr. Jefferson Davis writes from Europe to a friend in Montreal that his health is so bad that it is doubtful whether he will ever return to the United States. If he recovers, however, sufficient to travel, says the dispatch, he will spend the summer in Canada and the winter in Mississippi. His arrival may be expected daily.
