RUTH'S

Challenge Soluble Phosphate,

THE most active and durable FERTILIZER ever offered to the Farmer. This article is manufactured expressly to take the place of A. No. 1 Peruvian Guano, and will be found as active as Guano and much more durable in its effects. It is made upon the principle that the measure of our prosperity is the prosperity of the farmer, and every farmer who uses it may confidentially rely upon large Crops unless injured by providential acts. It is indeed the "Challenge" Fertilizer of the times and in order that it may always remain such we have engaged in its preparation the very best chemical skill in this country.

Give it a trial.

Selected Poetry.

PULPIT ELOQUENCE.

The Rev. Thomas H. Stockton was born at Mount Holly, New Jersey, June 4th, 1808, and died in Philadelphia, October 9th, 1868. He was probably the most eloquent pulpit orator that ever appeared in this country. In 1833 he was elected chaplain to Congress, and was re-elected several times afterwards. The celebrated William Wirt, who regularly attended the services, was wont to call him Nature's Orator; and Henry Clay styled him the most eloquent man in America.

Mr. Stockton was a member of the Methodist Protestant Conference, and was first stationed in Talbot county, on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, in 1827. It was here that he was first heard by Mrs. Coppuck, a native of that county, and who, after she removed to the West, and became Mrs. Welby, and perhaps better known as "Amelia" of the Louisville Journal, immortalizing that occasion by the following descriptive poem entitled "Pulpit Eloquence."

The day was declining—the breeze in its glee,
Had left the fair blossoms to sing on the sea,
As the sun, in its gorgeousness, radiant and still,
Dropped down, like a gem, from the brow of the hill;
One tremulous star, in the glory of June,
Came out with a smile and sat down by the moon,
As she graced her blue throne with the pride of a queen,
The smiles of her loveliness gladdening the scene.

The scene was enchanting; in distance away
Rolled the foam-crested waves of the Chesapeake Bay,
While bathed in the moonlight, the village was seen,
With the church in the distance, that stood on the green,
The soft-sloping meadows lay brightly unrolled
With their mantles of verdure, and blossoms of gold,
And the earth, in her beauty, forgetting to grieve,
Lay asleep in her bloom on the bosom of eve.

A light-hearted child, I had wandered away
From the spot where my footsteps had gambolled all day,
And free as a bird's, was the song of my soul
As I heard the wild waters exultingly roll,
While lightening my heart as I sported along
With bursts of low laughter and snatches of song,
I struck in the pathway half-worn o'er the sod
By feet that went up to the worship of God.

As I traced its green windings, a murmur of prayer,
With the hymn of the worshippers, rose on the air;
And, drawn by the links of its sweetness along,
I stood unobserved in the midst of the throng.
For awhile my young spirit still wandered about,
With the birds and the winds that were singing without,
But birds, waves, and zephyrs, were quickly forgot
In one angel-like being that brightened the spot.

In stature majestic, apart from the throng,
He stood in his beauty, the theme of my song;
His cheek pale with fervor—the blue orbs above
Lit up with the splendors of youth and of love,
Yet the heart-glowing rapture, that beamed from those eyes
Seemed saddened by sorrows, and chastened

O God! what emotions the speaker awoke!
A mortal he seemed—yet a deity spoke;
A man—yet so far from humanity riven;
On earth—yet so closely connected with heaven!
How oft in my fancy I've pictured him there,
As he stood in that triumph of passion and prayer,
With his eyes closed in rapture—their transient eclipse
Made bright by the smiles that illumined his lips.

There's a charm in delivery, a magical art,
That thrills, like a kiss, from the lips to the heart,
'Tis the glance—the expression—the well-chosen word,
By whose magic the depths of the spirit are stirred,
The smile—the mute gesture—the soul-startling pause,
The eyes sweet expression—that melts while it awes,
The lips soft persuasion—its musical tone—
O, such is the charm of that eloquent one.

The time is long past, yet how clearly defined,
That bay, church, and village float up on my mind!
I see amid azure the moon in her pride,
With the sweet little trembler that sat by her side,
I hear the blue waves as she wanders along,
Leap up in their gladness and sing her a song,
And I tread in the pathway half worn o'er the sod
By the feet that went up to the worship of God.

The time is long past, yet what visions I see;
The past, the dim past is the present to me!
I am standing once more mid that heart-stricken throng.
A vision floats up—'tis the theme of my song,
All glorious and bright as a spirit of air,
The light like a halo encircling his hair
As I catch the same accents of sweetness and love
He whispers of Jesus—and points us above.

How sweet to my heart is the picture I've traced!
Its chain of bright fancies seemed almost effaced,
Till memory, the fond one, that sits in the soul,
Took up the frail links, and connected the whole,
As the dew to the blossom, the bud to the bee,
As the scent to the rose, are these memories to me
Round the chords of my heart they have tremblingly clung,
And the echo it gives is the song I have sung.

Woman's Rights.

From an article on this subject by Horace Greeley published in Hearth and Home, we select the following:

For it were blindness not to see that the essential character of the household must be very different from what it ever has been when Smith spends his evenings at the Union League, and Mrs. Smith enjoys hers at the Manhattan Club (or their respective counterparts in any city or village:) he doing his best to elect the Republican, she rendering like hearty support to the Democratic or whatever may be the rival ticket. Their home—if the name be still retained—"will be another Yarrow" from that which long ago won the beloved appellation. Smith and Mrs. Smith will meet at breakfast in no mood for reciprocal endearments, and little fitted to show forth to their children how "birds in their little nests agree;" they will be more inclined to canvass with acerbity their rival platforms and candidates; and if Smith should happen to find ... morning paper some cheering re... rom Pennsylvania, Ohio, or some ... State previously regarded as doubt... will be apt to announce them in ... erms as to elict a reminder that he ... brute," while, if the news should ... n to favor Mrs. Smith's ticket, I am ... all sure that her use of it would not ... ually provoking and as sharply re... As to employment for woman, I hold ... hat there is an immensity of work to be ... one that specially pertains to the sphere ... of woman, which goes undone or is done ... very badly and expensively because most ... women reject it. This country is in pres... ent, pressing need of one hundred thous... and scientific, skillful, thoroughly orn... ied cooks; but very few Americanem... young women are seeking to wed. We ... selves to this urgent national wants half ... are poorly fed, as a people; our bread is ... cooked or burned and quite generally ... often sour or sodden, and innutritious, be... asteless, indigestible are grossly ignorant and ... cause its gaining so, the butter, on most ... ne... tables, is a poor sort of grease: ... soups, we do not know what ... ile for those who know how ... ey are the cheapest, most ... form of mingled ... I hope few will regard me as lacking sympathy with the many needy and ill-placed or *un*placed women of our day, who are anxiously inquiring and looking for "something to do." It is because I would have this class smaller in the next than it is in the present generation, that I speak so plainly as I do. We are fearfully miseducated people, and the case is worse with our girls than with our boys. Within the sphere of my observation, not one girl in ten is really trained or training to earn her own livelihood in any capacity: the greater number seem vaguely to expect that they will marry for a position and rear children for an occupation.—Hence, I welcome the agitation for Woman's Rights and Female Suffrage, as disturbing a stagnation which involved "the pain without the peace of death." The issue will not be such as the agitators contemplate, for Nature is too strong for a will even so stubborn as Anna Dickinson's, a persistency so dogged as Susan Anthony's but the fountains of the great deep will be profoundly stirred, and the result cannot fail to be wholesome. Woman is insisting that her share of the worlds work be allotted and secured to her, and the demand, however unwisely urged or mistakedly directed, is substantially just. What she, far more than man, needs to realize, is, that no useful work is degrading, though much may be rejected as unsuited to her sex or her strength. There is work enough that she may laudibly do—the need is that she be qualified for, and rendered willing to undertake it. So long as our more expensively educated girls shall fancy teaching, the only established pursuit that they can follow without disgrace, many of them must live miserably, and be driven by want to shame; but let them awake to a realizing sense of the true dignity of labor, the essential nobleness whereby human life is made happier and sweeter, and the world will welcome them to a fair allotment of its service, with the proper recompense thereof, and woman be everywhere freshly hailed, and with added reason, as "the last best gift" of God to man.

Bored Husbands.

The honeymoon at last draws to a close, and the relieved bridegroom gets back to his old haunts, to his work, his friends, his club; and though he takes to all these things again "with a difference," ... are helps and additions. ... still they ... of trial to a woman ... This is the time ... pinch, and ... sensible enough to understand ... that human nature cannot be kept at high ... pressure ... even in love, and that a man ... must ... sooner or later come down to work... ...day prose, from the passionate lover to the cool and sober husband—if she can understand this, and settle into his pace, without fretting on the one hand, or casting about for unhealthy distractions on the other—she will do well, and will probably make a pleasant home, and thereby diminish the boredom of life. But, unfortunately, not every woman can do this; and it is just during this time of the man's transition from the lover to the friend, that so many women begin to make shipwreck of their happiness and his.

They think to keep him a romantic wooer still, by their tears, at his prosic indifference to the little sentimentalities once so eagerly accepted and offered; they try to hold him close by their flattering but somewhat tiresome exaction; their jealousies—very pretty, perhaps, and quite as flattering—are infinite, and baseless as they are infinite; all of which is very nice up to a certain point, and in the beginning of things, but all of which get awfully wearisome as time goes on, and a man wants both a little change and a little rest.

If they are jealous, or shy, or unsocial as so many women are, they make life very heavy by their exclusiveness, and the monastic character they give to their home. A man married to a woman of this kind is in fact, a house prisoner, whose only hours of freedom lie beyond the four walls of home. His bachelor friends are shut out. They smoke, or entice him to drink more than his wife thinks is good for him, or they induce him to bet on the races, or to play for money at whist ... billiards, or they lead him in some ... der way of offence abhorrent to wo...
