... serves ... Mary-... the Press ... to take up the ... it deserves. ... State has been exempt ... the ... ation of railroad rings. ... York and Pennsylvania were ... ed to death by "Erie" and other ... road vampires, we escaped. While the people of those States were being sold out at every session of their respective Legislatures to grasping, heartless and godless monopolies, we were spared. But now, the "Campbells are coming" and we, too, are doomed! Appearance, indicate that they are going to make short work of us. In no other State have railroad partisans shown such ravenous hunger as here. In no other State have aspirants for the office of State Treasury dared to mix and mingle their personal interest in State politics. What do we behold? Two rival Railroad Companies put forth their champions for Treasurer of this State. They go into every county manipulating primary elections and county Convention, regardless of the wishes of the people, selecting such candidates (and such only) as will subscribe in advance to their respective interests. The two prominent aspirants have presumptuously introduced themselves as the only persons fitted for this office. The claims of one rests upon an eight year's incumbency, together with his known identification with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad interest; and ... such "claims" are expected to be all ... people have to acknowledge. The ... is not, "is he a democrat, is he ... tent, is he honest? but "has he been ... years in this office, and is he a good ... O. R. R. man?" If the answer be ... all is right! The State and her ... the people and their wishes, have nothing ... all to do in the matter. On the other hand, the claims of the other aspirant are said to rest on his identification with the Northern Central Railroad, with Simon Cameron at its head. I do not know whether this is true or not; but if its, such claims should be indignantly repudiated. Simon Cameron is not the man to be tolerated in Maryland; he hates her, and she hates him back; and while she will accord to every good enterprise within her limits, all the privileges which can be legitimately claimed, she will not stoop to kiss the bloody hand that smites her. When Simon Cameron stands ... the United States Senate and deliberately traduces her as a "rebel State," and seeks by all means to deprive her of the rights which she in common with other States, reserved for herself in the organic compact, let him not claim and expect to receive a favor which honor and self-respect forbid her to extend. Simon Cameron will spend no money in Maryland for her sake, but for the benefit of his own pocket, and no man in this State, who calls himself a "Democrat," should play spaniel to any such pseudo tyrant. We are under no obligation to him in any way, and our advice to him should be,—"attend to your own business and let Marylanders manage their own affairs."

As I have already said, the Fowler-Merryman movement has shown itself in every county in this State. In some of them it has split the Democracy in twain, and in one, it has caused blood-... Inebriate Asylum.

The ladies of Baltimore propose to hold a Fair in November for the purpose of aiding in the establishment of an Inebriate Asylum, for the reception and treatment of victims of intemperance, and they appeal to the ladies in the various counties of the State to give them their co-operation in the means they have adopted for accomplishing this benevolent object. It is to be hoped, and we think, it may be believed, that this humane appeal will not be made in vain. Women are always the foremost and most efficient laborers in all plans for the relief of the misery of mankind. Whilst they are themselves the most exempt of all our race from the peculiar frailty which the institution referred to is established to relive, they are more sensitive than all others to the degredation and agony which it brings in its train. As wives, as daughters, and as mothers, they know and feel how intense is their own interest in mitigating the evils of intemperance. They, who have no share in the guilt of this destructive habit, are the chief sufferers from its prevalence. Even where its bitter fruits have not poisoned the circle of their own domestic happiness, they know not how soon the tempter may enter their own Eden, and blight its fairst flowers, and bring thorns and briars upon its most fertile spots.—Hence it may be reasonably expected that they will eagerly co-operate in any plan which may present a harbor of refuge for those who are in danger of being lost, and of helping them break the chains of a habit which is ruinous alike to body, soul, reputation and estate.

Intemperance is an evil as old and as wide as the world, and all efforts to overcome it have, at the best, had only partial success. Temperance societies have effected some good, but their influence had been only limited. Some of the most eloquent temperance orators have themselves become victims of the invidious enemy against whom they hurled their brilliant invectives. Everybody must sympathize with their humane and noble purposes, yet every one knows that the tide of intemperance has not receded one inch in consequence of all the temperance societies have said and done. Prohibitory legislation has been even more ineffectual. Men can not be made virtuous by statute. They may be induced thereby to add hypocrisy to vice but that is the only result. The fact stares us in the face that, notwithstanding moral suasion and probibitory laws, intemperance in the United States has been of late years fearfully on the increase. Under these circumstances it is surely allowable, even if we can not arrest the progess of this evil, to save as many of its victims as possible, if indeed there are any agencies which can be made effectual to that object. The experience of inebriate asylums in those States where they have been established shows the cure and reformation of a large per centage of the inmates. Men of all ages and of all professions, who may have fallen into intemperate habits so as to be beyond the power of their self-control, or the influence of their friends, may be reclaimed by the treatment here received, and their families rescued from threatened poverty and ruin. There is not a household in the land which is secure from the evil of intemperance, and therefore not one which is not personally interested in aiding the establishment of such institutions.—Statesman.

Texas Politics--Resignation of Governor Pease.

It is alleged that the action of Messrs. Boutwell and Creswell and Gen. Reynolds toward the Hamilton republicans of Texas has produced great indignation through the State. Governor Pease, Judge Bell, and many other leading republicans will take the stump for Hamilton at once. The following is the Governor's letter of resignation:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Austin, Sept. 30, 1869.

Brevet Major General J. J. Reynolds, Commanding Fifth Military District.—General: The substance of a letter from yourself to President Grant has recently been published, in which opinions are expressed concerning the two parties in Texas that call themselves republicans which I do not consider warranted by the course that has been pursued by those parties during the progress to reconstruction.—This letter indorses General Davis and his followers, who whatever may be their present profession, have heretofore made the most strenuous efforts to prevent the adoption of any constitution by our late central committee, and to induce Congress to delay the reconstruction of the State.

It also condemns General Hamilton and his supporters, among whom are not less than eight-tenths of the educated Republicans of the State, through whose influence a constitution was adopted by the ... which ... to every citizen a ... equality of civil and political rights.

... ent as ... the case, why ... pulling our ears off about two of them? Why should we care that the of State Treasurer is filled by ... good democrat or conservative who is honest and competent man? Personally and politically, I am a friend of both ... men named. Between them, however, ... have my preference. Both, I have no doubt have been misrepresented by antagonistic adherents; but it is plain that their differences cannot be healed, and the only out of the way difficulty, is, in my humble opinion, for both to retire. If they will do this, or if the Democracy shall cause them to do it, then the Legislature should take care to select a man for the office who has no "Railroad" taint about him. We do not want a man who is hostile to railroad interests; neither do we want one who favors one at the expense of others; but we want one who will favor, so far as the interests of our State is concerned, every legitimate and useful enterprise within her borders. In your words, sir, "if we must have ... it be a Maryland ring!" ... must have a man, let him ... man. I hope, sir, ... editorial will be ... ocratic and ... throughout ... time, the ... In ...

... willed solely by a des... out the policy of Congress ... sider to be the formation of a con... giving equal civil and political rights to ... citizens, and the election of officers who would administer it in good faith to secure that object. I have believed for some time past that the only mode of doing this was by ratifying the new constitution and electing the ticket headed by Gen. Hamilton. Under existing circumstances, I am unwilling to become in any way responsible for the course being pursued by the military commander and the Administration at Washington. I therefore respectfully resign the office of Governor of Texas. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. M. PEASE.

Death of Ex-President Pierce.

Ex-President Franklin Pierce died at his residence, Concord, New Hampshire, on Thursday, the 7th instant, of a painful malady, with which he had long been afflicted. He was born in the town of Hillsborough, New Hampshire, in 1804. His father, General Pierce, served first as a soldier and afterwards as an officer throughout the Revolutionary war, and in 1827, at the ripe age of sixty-nine, was elected Governor of New Hampshire and was reelected to the same office in 1829. His son, Franklin Pierce, after completing his academical studies, entered Bowdoin College, Maine. After leaving college he commenced the study of law in Massachusetts, but finished it at Amherst, in New Hampshire, and when admitted to the bar commenced the practice of his profession in his native town. Before the end of two years he was elected Representative in the State Legislature, and during his second year's service was chosen Speaker of the House. In 1833 he was elected to Congress, and continued for four years a member of the House of Representatives. In 1837 he was elected to the Senate of the United States, but after five years' service in that body he resigned his seat and resumed at Concord his practice at the bar. For quite a number of years, though strongly pressed by his friends, he refused to be a candidate for any political office. On the breaking out of the Mexican war he enrolled himself as a private soldier in a Massachusetts regiment, but President Polk sent him a Colonel's commission, and in 1847 raised him to the rank of Brigadier General. He was in most of the battles which were fought between Vera Cruz and Mexico. On the restoration of peace he returned home and resumed the practice of the law. In 1850 he was chosen a member of the Convention to revise the State Constitution of New Hampshire, and in 1852, after thirty-five ballotings, was nominated by the Democratic National Convention as the Democratic candidate for the Presidency. He was elected President in November of the same year, was inaugurated the following March, and served to the end of his term. Soon after his retirement into private life he visited Madeira and traveled extensively in Europe, from whence he returned in 1860. During the whole period of our civil war his sympathies were with the South. He was a kind and genial, high-toned and honorable gentleman, and if as a statesman he ranked below the most notable of his predecessors, he was at least their equal in wearing worthily the dignity of his high office. No man ever left the Presidential chair with a more stainless reputation than Franklin Pierce.

Another Outrage by a Negro in Maryland.

On Monday last, a colored man committed an outrage on a young lady near Fort Washington, sixteen miles from this city, while she was on her way and within 200 yards of a schoolhouse, she being the teacher. When found by her friends she was lying quietly on the ground, fearing to move lest the assailant should return, and, finding her alive, kill her.

He was arrested on the same day, taken to Piscataway, where he was identified by the lady, a committal made out against him for court, and, in charge of constables John Underwood and Anthony Anderson, he was immediately started in a wagon for Marlboro', the county seat. At his request he was taken by his house to tell his wife good-bye. While the wagon was standing in front of his house, it was approached by about twenty men dressed only in their shirts and drawers, one only in a shirt, and with handkerchiefs with pierced eye-holes tied over their heads, who after tying Constable Underwood, who had attempted to defend his prisoner, and fired several shots at the lynchers, removed him from the wagon and made Deputy Constable Anderson drive the vehicle to the woods, a short distance off, where he, too, was put out and tied.

The wagon was then driven by one of the maskers under a large white oak tree, and a noose having been adjusted over a limb, the prisoner, who was handcuffed, was made to stand up, but his head not reaching the noose he was made to get upon the driver's seat, when the noose was put around his neck and the wagon driven from under him, he springing up at the time, apparently with the intention of expediting his death.

The rope slipped, and the wretch's feet touched the ground. One of the maskers then jumped upon his shoulders to bear him down, while some of the others swung him to and fro until life was extinct, after which the whole party formed into line, and fired a volley at his body. After swinging for two hours, his body was cut down, and a coroner's jury, which had been summoned to hold an inquest upon it, returned a verdict of "death from
