FATTENING HOGS.

The length of time required for fattening hogs is from three to five months, dependent upon the feeder's means, the breed he adopts and the attention he bestows upon them, as also to the amount of judgment brought to the assistance of the work. When hogs are first put up they should be in moderate condition, not confined until they are so, the food then should be somewhat better to that on which they have already fed, but not at once in too great a degree, it should be improved step by step, till the digestive powers are adapted for that of the most nutritious quality with which the fattening is to be completed: over-gorging is sure to cause indigestion, and the only remedy for this is abstinence. It is essential that pigs be fed at regular intervals, any animal fed regularly thrives better than those fed at irregular intervals, and where the diet is varied and not administered to satiety, the process is accompanied with profitable results. The best period to commence fattening is in the autumn; then almost every kind of food is to be had in plenty, as well as in perfection; the weather is neither too hot nor too cold; and the humidity generally prevalent at this season acts beneficially upon the skin and tissues, and as it were lubricates the whole economy. Besides, they are ready to be slaughtered at the period when this can be done with most advantage, when the lowness of the temperature allows more time and consequently enables the owner to turn the flesh to the greatest advantage; whereas in warm weather the meat must be salted or picked, eaten or disposed of immediately, or it turns off and is spoiled. The best kind of food for fattening pigs are pasturage on clover or lucerne, or a run in the cornfield immediately after the crop has been taken in. Milk or whey mixed with corn, oat, barley or pea-meal, alone, or in connection with each other or with boiled and mashed potatoes. Peas given whole, or crushed, or in the form of soup and either alone or mixed with potatoes or meal. Potatoes and rice; potatoes and meal of any of the above kinds, or mashed potatoes and whole grain.

A small portion of salt should always be mingled in whatever food given, as it tends to stimulate the appetite as well as the digestive functions; it will also be found advantageous occasionally to administer a little sulphur or powdered antimony, say about once or twice a month; these tend to purify the blood, as also to facilitate digestion and maintain the appetite. Small meals and many of them are preferable to few and large ones, for swine are very apt to overeat and gorge themselves or, if any be left in the trough to return to it by fits and starts until it is all gone; in both cases the digestive functions are impaired and the process is not fully and beneficially performed. Regular hours of feeding should be strictly observed; pigs soon learn to expect their meals at certain hours, and their stomachs being ready for it, indigestion follows irregularity and prevents much benefit being derived from the meal when it does come.

In the opinion of the writer the most economical and advantageous form in which grain can be used is that of meal moistened with sour or skim-milk or water, into a kind of soup or porridge. Some authorities recommend when mixing with water the proportion of five bushels of meal to a hundred gallons of water, the mixture to be stirred several times a day for two or three weeks, until an imperfect fermentation takes place, and it becomes acescent. In this state its fattening powers are claimed to be greatly increased. Says one who has pursued this method in a large way. "The difference in profit between feeding in this manner and giving the grain whole, is very great, so great that whoever tries it once, will be apt to change it for the common method." Hogs put up to fatten, highly fed and taking little exercise are very liable to acidity of the stomach, calcareous matters remedy this evil and are found in occasional feeds of ashes, cinder or earth which the animals champ and swallow. Too many pigs should not be fed in the same pen, three are sufficient and they should be as near as possible of the same age.

Treshing from the Field.

Steam threshing machines are destined speedily to take the place of the horse machines. Then we can thresh out our grain as we draw it in from the field, and put the straw in the barn. And to those farmers who are short of barn room, and who have to stack their grain, this plan will be of even still greater advantage. It saves all the expense and loss of stacking. In stacking grain we always have two men, or a man and a strong boy, on the stack; and in threshing from the stack it requires two men, and sometimes three, to pitch the grain off the stack to the machine.—Now, in drawing directly from the field to the machine, all we need is one man to pitch the grain from the wagon to the machine, and consequently we save the labor of four or five men. We require three wagons and two teams, one man to pitch, and three men to load, drive and unload. This force will furnish the grain as fast as any ten-horse power machine can thresh it. Last year I was all through harvesting and threshing by the first of August, except some oats, and we had four months of good weather, before winter set in, to get the land ready for spring crops. We shall have no cause to complain of our "short seasons" when we find out how to avail ourselves of the long and delightful period between our early harvest and late winter. We have, agriculturally, the best climate in the world—if we only use it properly.—J. Harris, in American Agriculturist.

☞ Every farmer should have a compost heap. Collect every kind of fertilizer, and to prevent any from liberating the gases, keep the whole covered with earth or muck.

A Kiss and its Consequences.

"Blizzard," a Californian, relates the following in an epistle in which he endeavors to prove—and does—that "anybody can write poetry." It is a gem something after the manner of Poe's Raven—only more so:

Said I, "my pretty miss,
Let me have a little kiss,"
And I reveled in the bliss,
Rich and "meller."

"Just help yourself to more,"
Said she tripping o'er the floor,
And back toward the door
Of the celler.

I never saw the trap
Till I fell through it "kerslap,"
And you should have seen me "drap"
Through the hole!

Full twenty feet I fell—
How I struck I cannot tell—
But I sent up such a yell,
On my soul,

That the girl thought I was dying,
And at once set up a crying,
For the old man who was trying,
Not far off,

To mend a broken pump,
He turned and with a jump
Cleared the shed, and tumbled plump
Into a trough!

But what has this to do
With the story which is true
As the gospel old or new?
With a hop.

He came up, inquired the matter,
"Whence the screaming and the clatter?"
He had half a mind to rap her
On the top

Of her head. She meekly pointed
Down the steps where I disjointed,
Lay, with greese and mud annointed
On the floor.

Blizzard up those steps was carried;
Quite a month there "Blizzard" tarried—
In two months was "Blizzard" married—
Nothing more

☞ A subscriber, says the Cecil Whig, who is tormented by that pest the newspaper borrower, sends us the following note enclosing the article published below, from the Champlain Gazette:

MR. EWING:—I send you the enclosed slip clipped from a Western paper, hoping its perusal will stop some of my Democratic neighbors from borrowing my Whig until I have read it myself. After that they may read it and learn something to their profit.

WE MEAN YOU.

There are at present a thousand persons in this county who do not subscribe for the Gazette, who, every week as soon as the mails are distributed go to their neighbors' houses, stores and shops to read it, and learn the local news. If they were too poor to take it we should find no fault with them for reading their neighbor's paper, for it is an evidence that they consider it a good paper; but many of them are far more able to subscribe for it than those whose paper they read, and their excuse is that they are now taking too many papers, and can't afford to take their county paper. You, it seems, can t afford to do without it, or you wouldn't sponge its reading off your neighbor. You don't treat him fairly, for he wants the paper for himself and family, and don't subscribe for it for your accommodation. You don't treat us fairly, for you get the benefit of all the time and labor we have expended in making up the paper without giving us any consideration This is neither fair, nor manly, and if you are really taking several papers now, you aught to discontinue one of your foreign papers and take a county paper. Every good citizen in the county should subscribe for his county paper, first, to encourage home industry, second, to encourage the paper and its proprietor to build up a first class paper, and finally to get up the county news, and keep posted on all business interests of the county.

If any one who should read the above, are sponging off of a neighbor at the same time, will remit us $2 for a year's subscription, we will insure him a clearer conscience. We can't edit a paper unless we get a living support, and if one man has a right to 'sponge,' of course every one has. Who will support the paper? Let every one do it, independent of his neighbor.

☞ A young lady contemplating matrimony was one morning handed a testament by her father, with the leaf turned down at the following passage:

"He who giveth in marriage doeth well, but he who giveth not in marriage doeth better."

She immediately returned it with the following reply written underneath:

"Dear father—I am content to do well; let those do better who can."

☞ The eccentric Elder S——, well known to many as an active and earnest Baptist preacher, once said from the pulpit: "They say there's no family government now-a-days. But there is—I tell you there is—just as much as there ever was; but" (leaning over the pulpit, and lowering his voice into a quiet and confidential tone) "the difference is this: when I grew up the old folks governed the young ones, but now the young ones govern the old ones."

TO KILL WARTS.—The following is said never to fail, if properly applied: Make a strong steep, from red oak bark, in hot water; when cold, apply as convenient, the oftener the better. In a few days the warts will disappear.

THE hog may not be thoroughly posted in arithmetic; but when you come to a square root he is there—the hog is
