

The Farmers' Column.

Important Information for Farmers---Selling Produce.

The current number of the American Agriculturist gives some excellent advice to farmers in regard to selling their produce. The Agriculturist says:

Farmers are often blamed for not selling their produce as soon as it is ready for market. And it must be confessed that those who do so, taking one year with another, do quite as well, all things considered, as those who hold on in hopes of getting higher prices. They obtain their money soon after harvest, and are enabled to use it to advantage. Dealers in grain can obtain money much more easily than farmers, and can consequently hold the grain longer.

While, therefore, we think farmers often do better by selling early, there is still room for the exercise of judgment. One reason why it is usually best to sell early is, that most farmers are disposed to hold on to their grain as long as possible, and when the time comes that they must sell, there are more sellers than buyers, and the price declines.

It is a curious fact that people generally are more inclined to sell when prices are low than when they are high. When wool was 80 cents a pound, it was more difficult to induce farmers to sell than when it was 40 cts. per pound. Last fall with red wheat at $2.25 in the interior of Michigan, farmers hesitated longer in making up their minds to let their crops go than they did last summer when they were offered $1.25 for the same wheat. It is a good rule to sell when you can get a price that will afford a good living profit. Farmers at the present time would have been richer by millions of dollars than they now are had they adopted this rule last autumn. We know of a great many who sold wheat this summer for one dollar a bushel less than they refused for it last fall. The whole nation suffered greatly by the indisposition to sell when a good price could be obtained. We might have shipped all our surplus wheat to England at a fair price, but by holding on we lost the opportunity, and finally sold at a price below the cost of production. We should take the lesson to heart.

On the other hand, when prices are low we should not be in a hurry to sell. Sound wheat is an article that will keep, and it is an article that is always required, and it is absolutely certain that it cannot long remain at a price much below the actual cost of production We cannot hold out hopes to such farmers as grow only ten or twelve bushels of wheat per acre, that they will obtain prices sufficient to compensate them for their labor. The country must be in a very unsatisfactory condition when such is the case; but we firmly believe that there is no reason to doubt that a farmer who raises good crops is safe in calculating that sooner or later he will be able to obtain such a price for his wheat as will enable him to make a fair profit.

There is one fact in this connection that should not be overlooked. In a cool, wet late season in England, the wheat crop is always below the average. And they have had such a season the present year. On the other hand it is very doubtful if the wheat crop of the United States is as large as was anticipated. We feel tolerably certain, therefore, that before another harvest wheat will bring a price sufficiently high to afford the wheat grower a good living profit. He should be satisfied with this. He should be in no hurry to take less.

The question arises: What price should we obtain for wheat to afford us a fair profit? At the present price of implements, machines, and other necessary articles, not forgetting labor and taxes, we shall not obtain extravagant profits if we sell good, sound red or amber wheat—say in Michigan—for $1.50 per bushel. A farmer who raises anything less than twenty bushels per acre will not get very rich, even if he obtains, in our present currency, $1.75 for red wheat and $2.00 for choice white wheat. When we can get these figures in ordinary seasons, it is not safe to hold on too long, but when immediately after harvest the price is much below these figures, those who can afford to hold their wheat run very little risk of loss in doing so.

—:o:—

Surface Manuring.

Some farmers are of the opinion that grass on what is denominated wheat ground cannot be successfully grown more than two or three years without breaking up, taking a crop of grain, and reseeding to grass again. This is probably a mistake. A good top-dressing of manure on the meadow in the fall or early in the spring, will obviate the necessity of breaking and seeding over again, will give greater depth and continuity to the sod, and increased richness to the grasses grown upon it. By surface manuring in autumn, when the days are comparatively short, the escape of ammonia from the spread manure will be very slight, while the increased vigor given to the grass the ensuing spring will be of a very marked character Top-dressing meadows is steadily gaining in the estimation of farmers, and as a favorable season for making the application is near at hand, those having the ground and the material for enriching it, will do well to make the trial before the setting in of winter.

—:o:—

Saving Cabbages.—We know of no better way to preserve cabbages through the winter than that which we have tried for a number of years. It is to plant or set them up in rows as they grow—that is with the roots down—fill in between with soil freely, then make a covering by planting 2 posts where there is a fence to rest on, or 4 where there is not, allowing for a pitch to carry off the water; lay bean-poles opposite the way of the pitch and cover with corn-fodder or straw. We have kept our cabbages for more than a dozen years this way in a perfect state through the winter and into the spring.

MY ACRE.

BY JOHN ESTEN COOKE.

I had an acre fenced around—
A little modest piece of ground
My father gave me, and I made
Shift, day by day, with plough and spade—
Working while others danced and played—
To cultivate my acre.

I sowed my seed—a little store;
So little!—but I had no more,
"This is not borrowed, but my own,"
I said, "and when the hours have flown
The harvest will be mine alone—
The grain reaped on my acre."

Then came the snow, and winter's cold;
The stormy winds like cannon rolled,
For four long years—and in that blast,
That iron hail that hurtled past,
The stoutest trees fell thick and fast
Around my little acre.

But nothing harmed it. Springstime came:
On every side, like yellow flame,
Blazed buttercups; and early buds
Made pictures in the laughing woods;
Birds sang, I heard the noise of floods
Around my smiling acre.

I smiled, and hoped on as before;
My good friends sneered, and said no more,
Looking upon me with disdain,
But soon my little field of grain
Laughed in the flashing summer rain
Falling upon my acre.

I reaped—and now my grain is bread;
I and my household all are fed!
I have enough, and those who eat
My bread, declare it light and sweet—
My modest bread made of the wheat
Cut from my little acre.

'Tis not ambrosia. Few indeed
Know where to find that costly seed.
Shakspeare and Dante knew—but I?
Ah, well-a-day! the years flit by,
I cannot find it, and I sigh—
Toiling upon my acre.

Alas! I am so little! Yet
Above me, too, the rainbow set
In heaven bends. The winds sing clear,
Clouds float, birds twitter through the year!
For me, no less, the spring is here
Laughing above my acre.

And evermore the sun and rain
Bring me my little crop of grain,
Or more or less, as heaven sends.
I owe no man—have faithful friends:
More!—one to whom my whole life tends,
Queen of my royal acre!

Come, friend! my door is open wide:
Here is my hand and heart. My pride
Is that I earn the bread I eat—
That only at His holy feet
I kneel, whose smile, like the sunshine sweet,
Lights up my little acre.

Care of the Watch.

1. Don't make a toy of it for yourself or your children. Never open it except for necessary purposes.

2. It should be regulated to about mean temperature, and always kept as near the same temperature, as possible.

2. It should not be allowed to stop—better that it be kept running all the time.

4. Keep it in as uniform position as possible. If in the pocket, better that the pendant ring be kept upright.

5. Out of the pocket, if it hang on the wall let it be upon some soft surface. Never allow it to lie on bare marble or other hard surface. If it lie on any surface, let it be with the face up and the pendant ring turned under, so as to keep the upper part most elevated.

6. Let your key exactly fit, and be kept perfectly clean. By the former you may save breaking chains, main springs, ratchets, clicks, etc.; by the latter prevent introducing dust.

7. Wind, if possible, at the same hour each day.

8. While winding, hold your watch steadily in the left hand. Turn only the key, and that firmly and evenly, avoiding all quick motions and jerks.

9. Set your watch with a key; never turn the hands any other way. You may turn the hands either way without danger if they do not turn hard.

10. On regulating a watch, should it be going fast, move the regulator a trifle towards the "slow," and if going slow, do the reverse; you cannot move the regulator too gently at a time, and the only inconvenience that can arise is that you may have to perform the same duty more than once.

11. If you find any difficulty that you do not understand, go at once to a good watchmaker.—Kelmo's Watch Repairer's Guide.

Magnificent Aquarium.—There is now preparing in Berlin what will be the most magnificent aquarium in the world. It is situated in the centre of the principal promenade of the city, and will make a large three-story building. It is to be under the charge of Alfred Brehm, one of the best German naturalists. The second story will be devoted to the aquarium proper, while the upper floor will contain mammalia, birds and reptiles. The sides of the cages towards the visitors will be of such thick glass as to resist the stoutest serpent or crocodile. The aquarium will be lighted, while the galleries where the visitors stand will be dark. Caves and grottoes abound, and art is exhausted to mimic nature. One portion of the aquarium proper will contain the denizens of the Baltic sea, another of the Atlantic, and a faithful copy of the Grotto of Capri will be peopled by Mediterranean fish. This aquarium is ten times larger than that of Hanover, and twelve times larger than that at Hamburg—the two most famous in the world.

☞ One of the Deacons of a certain church asked the Bishop if he usually kissed the bride at weddings. "Always," was the reply. "And how do you manage when the happy pair are negroes?" was the next question. "In all such cases," replied the Bishop, "the duty of kissing is appointed to the Deacon."
