On Feeding Horses.

We have no hesitancy in asserting at the outset, that but a limited number of horse-owners, in providing sustenance for the animals under their charge, take into consideration the effects of food upon the system or the connection of the manger with the stomach, and the subsequent bearing of certain modes of treatment upon the constitution. The system of feeding horses is diverse and complex; no set formula can be laid down, for with the various qualities of horses it must vary, and the various circumstances under which they may be required to do their work have also a controling influence. Generally speaking, all horses receive too much hay and not a proportionate amount of grain, or too much of both. Slow working horses do not require so much nutriment of a high quality, as those which are called on to do quick work and perform long distances; but as a rule, all animals which have to do hard work, and much of it, must necessarily be so kept as to have hard flesh, and they cannot be so kept, unless they are fed on hard grain. The faster and severer the work which a horse is expected to perform, the sounder, more nutritious and more abundant should be his food. His oats should be increased and his hay diminished. For a gentleman's road horse, in regular work and expected to perform considerable distances in good time, a small quantity of hay—say eight pounds per day—is amply sufficient, but as much oats may be given as the animal will eat. Dry hay is indisputably injurious to the wind; for ordinary work in their own stables the quantity of hay may be increased three to five pounds and the allowance of grain reduced to twelve quarts. A good plan is to give a good mash of stewed bran and oats once a week; this will cool the blood, give a kindly alterative to the system, keep the bowels moderately open and please the appetite of the animal. The use of nitre or drugs of any description should be studiously avoided and only used when prescribed as medicine. Many more horses than one would imagine have their wind broken by being worked quick and hard, with their bellies distended with hay, grain and water; are foundered from being over-fed, while hot, exhausted, and in a state of quasi suspense; are exposed to acute inflammation of the bowels, colic, &c., from being freely watered and subjected to drafts of cold air, showers of rain, or being injudiciously bathed or washed after sharp work, when their stomachs are empty and themselves craving a good dressing and a warm mash. Horses should never be fed within an hour before being put to work, and should then be worked but slowly until the bowels are fully evacuated. Water should never be given to them in large quantities before being put to work, and not at all on their coming off work, while hot, still less when jaded and exhausted. It should be supplied them often and in abundance, not so much in large draughts at a time, which improperly distend the stomach, as in small quantities at frequently recurring intervals. New corn is emphatically dangerous as horse feed and should never be used as such; being heating, it is very apt to cause colic and even acute inflammation. Old corn may be allowable, but should only be given sparingly and cautiously, in the ratio of two quarts where you would give three of oats. Moistening both hay and oats is especially beneficial to the wind and is a good practice. Horses are fond of salt, and small quantities should occasionally be mixed with their food. The training of horses for racing is comparatively speaking limited to a small class of people, and being of little general interest demands but a passing notice under our heading. Herbert says it consists, of course, in getting the horse for a short time, into the highest possible state of condition; hardness of flesh, excitement of spirits, bloom of coat, speed of foot and depth of wind, which is effected by combining the most nutritious and stimulating system of feeding, with such constant and severe exercise, and such medical treatment as, while exciting and raising every power of the animal to the utmost prevents surfeit, prevents fever, and, for the time preserves an equilibrium, which, however, at best is only temporary and cannot possibly be prolonged ad infinitum. It is an abnormal condition; and while it develops the utmost powers of the creature, requires the greatest skill and the most constant attention on the part of the person who undertakes to produce it.

The Power of Silence.

A good woman in New Jersey, was sadly annoyed by a termagant neighbor, who often visited her and provoked a quarrel.

She at last sought the counsel of her pastor, who added sound common sense to his qualities.

Having heard the story of her wrongs, he advised her to seat herself quietly in the chimney corner when next visited—take the tongs in your hand, look steadily into the fire, and whenever a hard word comes from your neighbor's lips, gently snap the tongs, without uttering a word.

A day or two afterwards, the good woman came again to her pastor, with a bright and laughing face, to communicate the [illegible] new antidote for scolding.

[illegible] had visited her, and, as [illegible]ced a tirade,

[illegible]e tongs. Another volley. Snap. [illegible]r still. Snap.

"[illegible] you speak?" said the ter[illegible]raged.

YOUR MISSION.

If you cannot on the ocean
Sail among the swiftest fleet,
Rocking on the highest billows,
Laughing at the storms you meet,
You can stand among the sailors,
Anchored yet within the bay;
You can lend a hand to help them
As you launch their boats away.

If you are too weak to journey
Up the mountain steep and high,
You can stand within the valley
As the multitude go by;
You can chant in happy measure
As they slowly pass along!
Though they may forget the singer,
They will not forget the song.

If you cannot in the conflict
Prove yourself a warrior true,
If where fire and smoke are thickest
There's no work for you to do—
When the battle-field is silent,
You can go with gentle tread,
You can bear away the wounded,
You can cover up the dead!

If you cannot in the harvest
Garner up the richest sheaves,
Many a grain, both ripe and golden,
Which the careless reaper leaves—
You can glean among the briars
Growing rank against the wall,
And it may be that the shadows
Hide the heaviest wheat of all.

If you have not gold and silver
Ever ready at command,
If you can not towards the needy
Reach an ever open hand
You can visit the afflicted,
O'er the erring you can weep,
You can be a true disciple
Sitting at the Saviour's feet.

Do not then stand idly waiting
For some nobler work to do,
For your Heavenly Father's glory
Ever earnest, ever true.
Go and toil in any vineyard—
Work in patience and in prayer—
If you want a field of labor
You can find it anywhere.

MRS. HELEN M. H. GATES.

To Young Men.

It is easier to be a good business man than a poor one. Half the energy displayed in keeping ahead that is required to catch up when behind will save credit, give more time to business, and add to the profit and reputation of your work. Honor your engagements. If you promise to meet a man, or do a certain thing at a certain moment, be ready at the appointed time. If you go out on business, attend promptly to the matter on hand, and then as promptly go about your own business. Do not stop to tell stories in business hours.

If you have a place of business, be found there when wanted. No man can get rich by sitting around stores and saloons. Never "fool" on business matters. If you have to labor for a living, remember that one hour in the morning is better than two at night. If you employ others, be on hand to see that they attend to their duties, and to direct with regularity, promptness and liberality. Do not meddle with any business you know nothing of. Never buy a thing simply because the man that sells will take it out in trade. Trade is money. Time is money. A good business is pleasant and attractive; then stay there to wait on customers.

Never use quick words, or allow yourself to make hasty or ungentlemanly remarks to those in your employ, for to do so lessens their respect for you and your influence over them. Help yourself, and others will help you. Be faithful over interests confided to your keeping, and all in good time your responsibilities will be increased. Do not be in too great haste to get rich. Do not build until you have arranged and laid a good foundation. Do not—as you hope to work for success—spend time in idleness. If your time is your own, business will suffer if you do. If it is given to another for pay it belongs to him, and you have no more right to steal it than to steal money. Be obliging. Strive to avoid harsh words and personalities. Do not kick every stone in the path; more miles can be made a day by going steadily on than by stopping to kick. Pay as you go. A man of honor respects his word as he does his bond. Ask, but never beg. Help others when you can, but never give when you cannot afford to, simply because it is fashionable. Learn to say no. No necessity for snapping it out dog fashion, but say it firmly and respectfully. Have but few confidants, and the fewer the better. Use your own brains rather than those of others. Learn to think and act for yourself. Be vigilant. Keep ahead, rather than behind the times. Young man, cut this out; and if there is a flaw in the argument, let us know.

Curious Fact in Physics.

We have all heard of Artesian wells, but a wonderful novelty is now announced in Algeria in the shape of Artesian fisheries. A well lately sunk at Ain Sala to the depth of 44 metres threw up not only a large body of water, but, to the great surprise of the engineers, an innumerable quantity of small fish. These subterraneous vertebrae are described as being on an average half an inch in length and resembling white-bait both in appearance and taste. The female is distinguished from the male by the presence of dark-colored stripes on the upper part of the body. From the fact of the sand extracted from these wells being identical with that which forms the bed of the Nile, it is concluded that there is an underground communication between them and that river.—*N. TO THE PUBLIC.

WE have this day, May 25th, 1869, completed extensive repairs on the MILL, which enable us to grind more than ten bushels of good meal in one hour, and more than eight bushels of wheat. If any one doubts it, I invite him to call, and I promise to convince him, we can accommodate all that may find it convenient to send, in the best possible manner. We have also repaired the mill for grinding Plaster, and Corn in the ear, etc.

N. B. I have been compelled to expend quite a large amount of money in the repaires or incur great loss, and cause the public much inconvenience; I would therefore take it as a great favour for any one owing me to call and pay their indebtedness, or any part of it. I have called where I thought it most likely to succeed and failed, and am discouraged from further attempts. This may find some prepared whom I least suspect. If so, I shall be spared the mortification of selling paper or borrowing money.

Most respectfully,
THOS. H. WHALAND.
