Something about Turkeys.

THE EXPERIENCE OF A PRACTICAL MAN.

[Hon. Welcome A. Browning, one of the most successful turkey-raisers in Eastern Connecticut, and who never fails to realize a profit of twenty dollars a year or more on every hen turkey he keeps, has consented to furnish us with his complete mode of rearing, managing and fattening his birds. We give it to the readers of Hearth and Home in nearly his own words:]

There should be a yard, of from one eighth to one quarter of an acre, where nothing else is allowed to go but turkeys. In the latter part of March, suitable nests should be made in the yard, and the turkeys should be watched and kept in the yard till they all lay. If two or three lay in one nest, when they have laid half a dozen eggs each, build nests on each side of the one where they all lay, and put in eggs; for, as a general thing, they will not crowd on to a nest with another turkey when there is a good nest by its side. If they continue to all lay in one nest, when one begins to set, shut her on—for an hour or two—say from eight till twelve each day, and then the others will go into the adjoining nests. When turkeys lay near together, they should all be set at the same time, for if one hatches a few days before the others, the peopling of the little ones will make them uneasy, and not unfrequently they forsake their nests. Besides, if turkeys set side by side, when they hatch and come off, they will almost invariably go together and not fight. Set the first turkey on some old or addled eggs, and let her set till all get to setting, and then put under the eggs

KEEPING THE EGGS.

It is well to take the eggs in every night, to prevent their freezing or being destroyed by vermin. The eggs that are laid first should be put in a dish or basket, to the amount of seventeen or eighteen, as many as you wish to set under one turkey, and then mark them one, two, three, etc. The reason of this is, that eggs that have been laid three weeks will be two days' longer in hatching than eggs just laid; consequently, some would hatch and be off running round while other eggs were just being pipped. If eggs are left in the nest, the turkey setting on them every day (to lay) will warm them, and they will all hatch together.

Nests should be made so tight that when a turkey is taken off, the little ones cannot get into the wall.

TAKING OFF.

When a turkey or turkeys are ready to take off, make a yard, twelve feet square (with boards a foot or eighteen inches wide), so tight that the little ones cannot get out. Into this, put one, two, or three old ones, as the case may be, with their young ones, and let them remain two or three days, with a pie-pan of water, so that the little ones can get in and out of the pan. When turkeys are taken off with their little ones, have a strong decoction of tobacco (which, by the way, is just fit to kill sheep-ticks and lice), and saturate the old ones under the wings, and on the naked parts of the body under the wings. Setting turkeys and soldiers in the army are very apt to get lousy, and lice are almost certain death on little turkeys. If the old turkeys are not lousy, the tobacco does no harm. If the young ones get lousy, put yellow snuff and grease under their wings.

FEEDING.

Young turkeys should be fed on the homœopathic principle. They need but little to eat, but need it often. The best feed for little turkeys is corn ground coarse, and then mix it with sour or curdled milk, scalded, so as to make a curd, and eggs boiled hard and chopped fine, and all mixed or mashed rather dry. Then, as the young turkeys grow larger, have the meal ground coarser until some of the kernels of the corn come out whole. Fine meal is liable to bake in their crops.

Turkeys should never be fed after six o'clock; they are great sticklers for health, and of course they go in for early and light suppers.

CARE.

Turkeys must not be kept shut up after they are a week old. They cannot bear confinement. They are regular Yankees, possessed of the spirit of change and enterprise. Turkeys must be driven home and yarded every night, else the skunks or foxes will kill them. Turkeys should be watched from morning till night for three weeks after they are turned into the fields, to keep the hawks and crows away; and see that none of the little ones linger behind and get lost.

In rain-storms they should be shut under the barn, or on the barn-floor, or in a large stable, only putting one flock in a place; for if you shut two or more flocks together, they will kill more than they would lose to be out of doors.

Get as many old ones to herd together as possible, for it takes no longer to hunt up and drive home eight old ones and a hundred young ones than one old one and and a dozen young ones; then, if you get on to your neighbor's land, it will take no longer to drive off a large flock than a small one; but they should not be allowed to get on to a neighbor's land, for a neighbor is under no more obligation to keep his neighbor's turkeys than he is his neighbor's sheep, for both are taxable property, and both should pay damage when done.

BEST AGE FOR BREEDERS.

Old turkeys, as a general thing, are better to raise young ones than yearling turkeys are, because they are more gentle and they lay a larger egg, and the young ones when hatched will be larger and stronger. Turkeys, two, three, or four years old, are the best ages. Save over the winter the best and gentlest of your old turkeys and some young ones. Never save little late turkeys for breeders; they lay small eggs and hatch small, weak young ones.

It is best to change gobblers every year. In order to have good turkeys, feed them from the day they are hatched to the day before they are killed. A large flock of turkeys needs more feeding, according to numbers, than a small flock, as there is only the same amount of bugs and worms. One great secret of raising turkeys is to take care of them; and then you can't always raise them, for they won't lay or they won't hatch, or something may befall them.

DIFFICULTIES.

It is of little use to try to raise them when the fields in the immediate neighborhood of the house are in heavy mowing. They get into the grass, and getting tired, go to sleep in the sun, and are lost.

They should have a range of pasture-lands while they are young; when August comes, they can take care of themselves.

PROFITS.

This year (1869) I have kept eight hen turkeys and one Tom, and have raised one hundred and twelve young ones, one hundred of which were of the first brood, and twelve of the last.

Of these I sold at Thanksgiving:

29, weight 348¾ lbs., average 12 lbs., at 27 cts. ($3.25 a-piece)	$ 94 18
At Christmas:
71, weight 1072 lbs., average 15 6-16 lbs., at 25c. ($3 77 a-piece)	278 00
On hand January 1st, 1870:
12, worth (at least) $2,	24 00
Total sales from eight hens,	$396 18
Up to
June 1, I fed 8 bu. corn,	$1 20— 9 60
July " 4 "	1 20— 4 80
Aug. " 6 "	1 20— 7 20
Sept. " 10 "	1 20—12 00
Oct. " 20 "	1 20—24 00
Nov. " 35 "	1 20—42 00
Dec. " 35 "	1 20—42 00
Total cost of food,	$143 60
Profit,	$252 68

Average for the eight hen turkeys each, $31.57.

I have not included in this any thing for watch and care. Most of it has been done by a little boy not twelve years old, and all the trouble was over by the middle of July.

Love for Jesus.

A group of dear children, one warm summer day,
Were seated most cosily, chatting away,
Beneath the cool shade of the evergreen trees,
Whose branches were waving with every breeze.

They talked of their dollies, with rare, pretty names,
Their schools and their lessons, their plays and their games;
And the dear little creatures "built castles in air,"
And their dreams of the future were lovely and fair.

Strange questions were started, and answered as well;
But the strangest of all—just hear while I tell:
Said Willy: "If Jesus were here, and should say,
"Just ask what you will, you shall have it straightway."

"Pray what would you ask?" and he called name by name,
And the answers each cheerfully, readily came;
All childlike in nature—some simple, some wise,
Some looking a smile, and yet others surprise.

I said all replied. There was one modest child,
Whose voice was last heard—so sweet and so mild;
Dear Mary! her answer, so unlike the rest,
Was an outburst of love to the Friend she loved best.

She said, "I would ask Him for nothing at all,
But tell Him my love, as before Him I'd fall:
I could think of nought else but the love that I owe—
From the first to the last, nothing else could I know.

"For hath He not given His life for the lost,
And with it given all things at marvellous cost?
Love, love for my Saviour, 'tis all I can give;
Love, love is my song, and shall be while I live."

Dear child! like the friend of the Saviour of old,
Thou hast chosen that part which is better than gold,
And O, may the lesson thy words here impart
Leave its imprint on many a young, tender heart!

N. Y. Observer.

Neighbor's Quarrels.

They who attempt to outwrangle quarrelsome neighbors go the wrong way to work—a kind deed will be more likely to be successful. Two children were want to pass by a savage dog; the one took a stick in his hand and pointed it at him, but this only made the enraged creature more furious than before. The other child adopted a different plan; for, by giving the dog a piece of bread and butter, he was allowed to pass, the subdued animal wagging his tail in quietude. If you happen to have a quarrelsome neighbor, conquer him by civility and kindness; try the bread-and butter system, and keep your stick out of sight. This is an excellent Christian admonition: "A soft answer turneth away wrath, but grievous words stir up anger."

☞ A polite man was once making a voyage on the Danube, when the boat in which he was, sunk. When he was just on the point of drowning, he got his head above the water for a moment, and said: "Ladies and gentlemen, will you please to excuse me?" and down he went.

WE have this day, May 25th, 1869, completed extensive repairs on the MILL, which enable us to grind more than ten bushels of good meal in one hour, and more than eight bushels of wheat. We have also repaired the mill for grinding Plaster, and Corn in the ear, etc.

N. B.
