Rules for Selecting Trees from the Nursery.

In visiting nurseries, we often notice persons who are purchasing fruit trees, making their selection of such, as they think, are the best specimens of the kinds sought, and in general the rules by which both fruit and ornamental trees should be selected from the nursery rows; but the error most generally committed, is in choosing large specimens, which cost much more than they are worth. Were we about to plant an orchard of choice fruit, the age of the trees purchased by us would be: Apples two years old, pears two years, peaches one year, cherries one or two years, plums two years—all from the graft or bud. Rather than have trees older than two years, we would prefer them one year, and for the following reasons:

1. Such small plants are easily taken up with nearly all their small fibrous roots. They have no large woody roots that are sure to be cut through in the act of digging, and from the ends of which no small rootlets will generally spring, unavoidably leaving a large amount of dead rootwood, which is a positive injury.

2. Small trees receive less check in being transplanted, and in three or four years equal, if not exceed in size, elder ones. They also bear in about the same period, while they are almost always far more thrifty,

3. Trees that have been transplanted when small, are not liable to disease. When a large tree is transplanted, the growth for that season is always very small, and the bark presents a dry, unhealthy appearance. The tree is liable to become bark-bound, especially with cherries, and the hard pruning necessary leaves a great amount of dead matter in the tree, that may be concealed by new layers of wood, but still remains dead matter.

If we could plant seeds of the trees we desired, in the places where we wanted them to form an orchard, such trees would be more healthy, and much longer-lived, than transplanted trees can be; but this is a condition of things not easily attained. We should, therefore, adopt the nearest approach to it, and set out young, thrifty plants, with all their fibrous roots untrimmed, that will adapt themselves to the conditions in which they are placed, and that will, in course of time, form a valuable orchard. Could we take up large trees with all their roots, and a ball of earth with each tree, then such trees would not meet with a check, and a gain of time would be the result; but this is seldom the case, and the better course is to plant out small specimens.'

These rules apply also to ornamental trees and shrubs. We have a good example of this before us. About twelve years ago, a large evergreen was transplanted by a friend of ours into his garden. It was about twelve feet high, and great care was taken of it. At the same time we set out a small one, about eighteen inches in hight. Now, what do you think is the difference between the two trees at the present time? The large tree has grown about four feet. The small one is twenty feet high. The large one has become the small, and the small the large. But this is an extreme case, and the like does not always occur. Still it is a good illustration of the imprudence of selecting large trees.—Gazette.

Planting Out Strawberries.

We have no time to answer individual inquiries in relation to garden crops. We try to inform all, so far as we are able to do so, how we manage things successfully, and they can follow us if they see proper.

As to planting out strawberries, about which we have many inquirers, there are several ways. Of course the ground must be dug to a good depth, and pulverized carefully, having applied a liberal quantity of barn-yard manure. The beds can be marked out three feet wide and made as long as may be desired. Let the footpaths between the beds be eighteen inches apart and remove from them all the runners as fast as they encroach. Set the plants firmly in the ground, one foot apart each way Get the Triomphe de Gand, which is of mixed sexes, and Hovey's Seedling, which is a pistillate, and plant them in alternate beds, but do not let them mix, which they will do if the vines are allowed to cross the paths Some persons may prefer Russell's Prolific, which is an excellent variety, or Jucunda, which cannot well be beaten. Either of these can be substituted for Triomphe, if Hovey is retained, which we would advise as there is no berry more certain to give a crop, or which is handsomer in appearance, which will bear as many years without renewing the bed, or which is much superior.

Many persons prefer the hill system of planting out strawberries, and with some very strong-growing varieties it may possibly be the best. But from our own experience we prefer the broadcast planting. It has several advantages. The plants keep the ground moister, it requires less labor, and the beds last twice as long by producing new bearing plants every year. In the hills the old plants are fruited year after year, and as a consequence the berries yearly get smaller.

One thing must be particularly borne in mind: the beds must be kept clear of weeds, for if they are allowed to get headway they will seriously damage the crop. Late in autumn the beds should be covered with light manure; and in the spring the very coarsest portion should either be removed or carefully placed about the plants.

There is no more trouble to cultivate a bed of strawberries than there is a bed of onions or cabbage, and this we wish all those who do not raise the delicious fruit to remember.—Germantown Telegraph.

SHOO, FLY!

This ludicrous, yet popular song with the masses, is quite old, having been sung long before the war by the negroes of Georgia. It is well known that a fire-engine bore the name of "Shoo Fly," in Savannah, as far back as 1856, having derived its name from this simple and senseless song. As a matter of curiosity to the hundreds who have had the chorus ringing in their ears on every hand, for several weeks past, we give the words of what may truthfully be termed the song of the period:

SHOO FLY! DON'T BODDER ME!

I think I hear de angels sing,
I think I hear de angels sing,
I think I hear de angels sing—
De angels now are on de wing.
I feel, I feel, I feel—
Dat's what my mudder said;
De angels pourning lasses down
Upon dis nigger's head.

CHORUS: Shoo fly! don't bodder me!
Shoo fly! don't bodder me!
Shoo fly! don't bodder me!
I belong to Company G.

I feel, I feel, I feel,
I feel like a morning star;
I feel, I feel, I feel,
I feel like a morning star,
I feel, I feel, I feel,
I feel like a morning star;
I feel, I feel, I feel,
I feel like a morning star.
If I sleep in de sun, dis nigger knows,
If I sleep in de sun, dis nigger knows,
If I sleep in de sun, dis nigger knows,
I feel, I feel, I feel—
Dat's what my mudder said;
Whenever dis nigger goes to sleep,
He must cober up his head.

CHORUS: Shoo, fly! don't bodder me! etc.

Tea and Coffee.

Hall's Journal of Health says: Taking into account the habits of the people, tea and coffee for supper and breakfast add to the health and life, if a single cup be taken at either meal, and is never increased in strength, frequency or quantity.—If they were mere stimulants, and were taken thus in moderation and with uniformity, they would in time, become inert, or the system would become so habituated to their employment as to remain in the same relative position to them as if they had never been used; and consequently, as to themselves they had better never have been used, as they are liable to abuse. But science and fact unite in declaring them to be nutritious as well as stimulant; hence they will do a new good to the system every day to the end of life, just as bread and fruits do; hence we never get tired of either. But the use of bread and fruits is daily abused by multitudes, and dyspepsia and cholera morbus results; yet we ought to forego the use of tea and coffee, because their inordinate use gives neuralgia and other ailments. But the habitual use of tea and coffee, at the last and first meals of the day, has another high advantage—is productive of incalculable good in the way of averting evils. We will drink at our meals, and if we do not drink these, we will drink what is worse—cold water, milk or alcoholic mixtures. The regular use of these last will lead the young to drunkenness; the considerable employment of simple milk, at meals, by sedentary people—by all, except the robust—will either constipate, or render bilious; while cold water largely used, that especially in cold weather, attracts to itself so much of the heat of the system, in raising said water to the temperature of the body—about one hundred degrees that the process of digestion is arrested; in the meanwhile, giving rise to a deathly sickness of the stomach, to twisting pains, to vomitings, purging, and even to cramps.

A QUIET HINT TO THE CONSCIENCE.—A good story is related of the late Rev. J. J. Cannon, D. D., of New Brunswick. On one occasion, being accustomed to leave his secular affairs very much to take care of themselves, in his higher engagement in spiritual things, he had given an order to a horse jockey for the purchase of a horse. When the man called, a few days after he was shown to the study, and said:

"Well, Dominie, I have got a horse that will suit you to a fraction."

"What's the price?" said the Doctor.

The jockey named a fair sounding sum. The doctor rose, and opening his purse and pulling out a roll of bills, began to count out the money.

"What! said the jockey, are you not going to look at the horse?"

"No," said the doctor, you say he will suit me; I will take your word for it."

This fearless reliance stimulated the jockey's conscience into unwonted activity, and starting up, he said:

"Keep your money to-day, Dominie; perhaps I can get you a better horse," and withdrew, to come again another day with an animal that would bear subsequent reflection.—Congregationalist.

HER PHILOSOPHY.—"Now, young people," said a professor of natural history to his class, "now, then, as to hens. A hen has the capacity of laying just one hundred eggs, and no more, and she never does the job in fifty years. Now what is to be done with her after that?" "Cut off her head and sell her to a boarding-house keeper for a spring chicken!" exclaimed an urchin whose father dealt in poultry.

SIX DEGREES OF CRIME.—He who steals a million is a shrewd financier.

He who steals half a million is a defaulter.

He who steals a quarter of a million is an "irregular" financier.

He who steals a hundred thousand is a rogue.

He who steals fifty thousand is a knave.

But he who steals a pair of boots or a loaf of bread is a scoundrel of the deepest dye, and deserves incarceration in a prison.
