

The Farmers' Column.

Sow Thinly.

It is now settled that thin sowing gives the heaviest yield. An article lately published by an English farmer presents a large number of facts, by an extensive correspondence with agriculturists in England who have tested the thick and thin sowing of wheat in a series of years. The testimony is so strongly in favor of thin sowing, that it appears wonderful that English farmers have not adopted the system generally. The requisitions are that the land shall be in the best of tilth, the seed of the best character, and the variety pure; also that it be planted so as to give each seed one foot square of soil. It appears from the experiment mentioned that the more grains sown the fewer the number of ears to each stock of grain per acre. The general yield is said to be at least doubled by thin sowing. By special culture of small pots, a crop at the rate of 108 bushels per acre has been produced, and another of 162 bushels per acre. By thin sowing it is understood that but a single seed is to be dropped in a place. There is an excellent recommendation that every farmer have a plot of ground set apart to secure pure seed. In this case the seed must not only be selected, but carefully picked over by hand, rejecting all defective or imperfect grains and retaining only such as by their fullness show their healthy, vigorous constitution. Another plan is to select the finest heads of the variety desired from the fields before cutting. If farmers will not do this for themselves, they should purchase from those who make a specialty of raising seed grain. It held that the lack of these observances on the part of the English wheat grower, is reducing the yield per acre in Great Britain steadily and surely; and it is only a question of time when that nation will depend, to double the degree of to-day, upon foreign countries for the staff of life; and yet, we in this country do not obtain over half the crop per acre that England produces. This being the case, where shall we stand at the end of the present century, with a population of perhaps one hundred millions? A communication not long since made to one of the agricultural journals of England by the grest experimentalist, Mechi, of Tiptree, near London, says, that the sowing of grain thickly is a grave national calamity; that more crops fail to yield well from too much seed than from too little manure.—He adds:

"Liebig justly says that the greatest enemy to a wheat plant is another wheat plant, for the very obvious reason that both require the same food; small heads and kernels, and weak flabby straw, are the natural consequences of this competition. For several years I tried one bushel of wheat per acre, against two bushels per acre, both drilled. The difference in favor of the one bushel was equal to a rent of thirty shillings (English) per acre."

We regret that Mr. Mechi did not more clearly state the per centage of gain, in the amount of increased quantity of wheat; but it is not to be doubted that thin sowing is by far the most profitable system, saving of seed and gain in yield making a vast difference on large farms. The great decrease of the wheat crops on the soil of the Western States is a matter for grave consideration. In half a century, almost every rood of agricultural territory will be under plow and harrow; and unless we begin to adopt a new system of careful culture, embracing a methodical and economical distribution of the very best of seed in the wheat line, we shall find the average yield of that cereal less than five bushels per acre, for the entire agricultural domain. We have been charged with great waste of agricultural resources by English farmers, who, knowing the natural richness of our Western soils, very properly expect to see larger yields; but when we are made to know that, even in England, a want of method in sowing wheat loses one quarter to one-third of a crop, and with our naturally superior fertility, we have not shown as large a yield per acre as the soil of that country by fifty per cent., we may well charge ourselves with most culpable mismanagement, and a gross ignorance of the science of grain-growing at least, if not of all other departments of agriculture. It would be well if the manufacturers of seed plants or drills would bear in mind the fact, that thin sowing of all grains will result in the largest yield, and the machine that will deposit in the soil grains of wheat, singly, at regular distances from each other, will be worth millions to the farming world. Let the soil be well pulverized and well drained, let it also be sufficiently rich, and then let the berry be large, plump, and full of vitality, and we shall get fifty per cent. more per acre, at an out-lay of one half the usual expense for seed; and better than all, the wheat we then gather will be of the very best character.

EVERY farmer should keep a scrap-book of some kind, in which a certain portion should be devoted to each particular topic in which he is interested; for instance, so many pages to wheat, so many to other grains, so many to horses, so many to cattle, sheep, swine, fruit growing, manures, dairy management, etc. Then, when something strikes the mind as especially valuable, cut it out and insert in its proper department of the book. In a few years a valuable encyclopedia of agriculture will have been gathered to which reference upon any topic can readily be made.

Clover as a Fertilizer.

When red clover is ploughed under to renovate the soil, and when the crop is good, the clover roots and stubble, with barn-yard manure, will furnish all the vegetable matter, nitrogen and ammonia is passed, and may be saved in the manure; so that on good land, where all is well managed, and the clover sod ploughed up while yet in full vigor, so as to secure the large mass roots, of nearly the full benefit of the clover crop may be had, both for feeding and f - making manure.

CORN SONG.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

Heap high the farmer's board!
Heap high the golden corn!
No richer gift has autumn poured
From out her lavish horn!

Let other lands exulting glean
The apple from the pine,
The orange from its glossy green,
The cluster from the vine.

We better love the rugged gift
Our rugged vales bestow,
To cheer us when the storm shall drift
Our harvest fields with snow.

Through vales of grass, and meads of flowers,
Our plows their furrows made,
While on the hills the sun and showers
Of changeful April played.

We dropped the seed o'er hill and plain,
Beneath the Sun of May,
And frightened from our sprouting grain
The robber crows away.

All through the long bright days of June,
Its leaves grew bright and fair,
And waved in hot midsummer's noon,
Its soft and yellow hair.

And now, with Autumn's moonlight eyes,
Its harvest time has come,
We pluck away its forest leaves,
And bear the treasure home.

There, richer than the fabled gifts,
Apollo showered of old,
Fair hands the broken grains shall sift,
And knead its meal of gold.

Let vapid idlers loll in silk,
Around their costly board;
Give us the bowl of samp and milk
By homespun beauty poured.

Where'er the wide old kitchen hearth
Sends up its smoky curls,
Who will not thank the kindly earth,
And bless our farmer girls?

Then shame on all the proud and vain,
Whose folly laughs to scorn
The blessings of our hardy grain,
Our wealth of golden corn.

Let earth withhold her goodly root,
Let mildew blight the rye,
Give to the worm the orchard's fruit,
The wheat-field to the fly.

But let the good old crops adorn
The hills our fathers trod;
Still let us, for his golden corn,
Send up our thanks to God.

COULD NOT BE CHEATED.—A dealer advertised eye-glasses by the aid of which a person could easily read the finest print. A well-dressed man called at the counter one day, to be fitted to a pair of spectacles. As he remarked that he never wore any, some were handed to him that magnified very little. He looked hard through them upon the book before him, but he declared he could make out nothing. Another pair of stronger power were saddled upon his nose, but as unsuccessfully as before. Further trials were made until at length the almost discouraged dealer passed to him a pair which magnified more than all the rest in his stock. The customer, quite as impatient as the merchant at having to try so many, put on the last pair, and and glowered through them at the printed page with all his might.

"Can you read that printing now?" inquired the dealer, pretty certain that he had hit it right this time, at any rate.

"Sure, not a bit," was the reply.

"Can you read at all?" ashed the merchant, unable to conceal his vexation any longer.

"Rade at all, is it!" cried the customer; "there's not a single word among them that I can identify the features av."

"I say, do you know how to read?" exclaimed the dealer impatiently.

"Out wid ye!" shouted the Irishman, throwing down the spectacles in a huff, "if I could rade, what 'nd I be afther buying a pair of spectacles for? Ye chate the people wid the idea that yer glasses 'nd help 'em to rade print aisy; but it's a big lie it is! Ah, ye blackguard, ye thought I'd buy 'em without tryin 'em!"
