

The Farmers' Column.

Cultivation of Indian Corn.

Corn is a cereal which requires a deep soil to produce a large crop. The plowing should therefore be deep and well done. I have generally found two yoke of oxen to make the best team; for two years I have used two yoke of oxen to a heavy plow for turning the first furrow and one yoke to a light subsoil plow to follow them, without throwing the soil out of the furrow, but simply to loosen it up.

Do not be afraid of turning up "that yaller stuff," but if the subsoil is cold and clayey, it is better to not bring too much of it to the surface; in this case the depth must be increased by degrees.

If the soil is stiff, let the field be first harrowed around and around the way the plow went, diagonally in both directions, and lastly backward and forward, parallel to the longest side.

If the corn is to be put in with hoes, mark out with a plow across the face of the hill, if the ground is rolling; then select a good, stiff pole twelve feet long, four feet from each end attach two ox-chains, which should have one end dragging on the ground. Let a man and boy or two boys take each an end of the pole, and pass up the fence, at right angles to the marking out of the plow, take care to keep the chain next the fence parallel to the same, and about four feet distant. In coming back, the end of the pole should be kept over the last chain mark. A common ox-chain, say ten feet long, will make a plain mark if the ground is in proper order.

Cover the corn carefully, and never more than from 1½ to 2 inches deep. If planted deeper than this, it will be longer coming up, and after it comes up it will grow very well until it is three or four inches high, when it will remain stationary for ten days or two weeks. By examining we will find that the first joint is below the surface of the soil, also that the roots are decaying, while new ones are being thrown out from the joint; these new roots require some ten or fifteen days for their complete formation, and during this time the plant remains stationary as far as growth is concerned. As soon as the new roots are fully formed the old ones will entirely disappear, and the growth will proceed as usual.

From actual experiments with grains taken from the same ear and same part of the ear, I have arrived at the following result: Corn planted one inch deep came up in eight days; that planted 1½ inches deep required nine and a half days; that 2 inches deep, ten days; 2¾ inches deep, eleven and a quarter days; 3 inches deep, twelve days; 3¼ inches deep, thirteen days; 4 inches deep, fourteen and a half days; 5½ inches deep, eighteen days; 6 inches deep, twenty-one days. The last lot came up and grew until about three inches high, when it remained stationary for a long time and finally died.

As soon as the rows are visible, the hoe-harrow should be passed twice in the middle of the row, but should not go too near the corn until it is three or four inches high. When the corn is about six inches high, remove the right-hand back-tooth of the hoe-harrow, and substitute for it a piece of boiler plate shaped like a mould-board of a plow. This will hill the corn but not so high as if done with a plow.

Do not work the corn when the ground is too wet, for nothing is gained by it. Work it often and well, for it will be a good investment. As soon as the corn is large enough to be broken by the swingletree, the latter should be shortened to one foot or eighteen inches.—GEORGE P. RODGERS, in Germantown Telegraph.

—:o:—

Grensing Wagons.

Few people fully appreciate the importance of thoroughly lubricating the axles, etc., of wagons and carriages, and fewer know what are the best materials and the best methods of applying them. A well-made wheel will endure common wear from ten to twenty-five years, if care is taken to use the right kind and proper amount of grease; but if this matter is not attended to, they will be used up in five or six years. Lard should never be used on a wagon, for it will penetrate the hub and work its way out around the tenons of the spokes, and spoil the wheel. Tallow is the best lubricator for wooden axle-trees, and castor oil for iron. Just grease enough should be applied to the spindle of a wagon to give it a light coating; this is better than more, for the surplus put on will work out at the ends, and be forced by the shoulder-bands and nut-washers into the hub around the outside of the boxes. To oil the axeltree, first wipe the spindle clean with a cloth wet with spirits of turpentine, and then apply a few drops of castor oil near the shoulders and end. One teaspoonful is sufficient for the whole.

—:o:—

Profit of Fattening Hogs.

In Kentucky the practice largely prevails of persons not directly engaged in farming, buying store hogs and corn, with the design of making pork for the market. This year those who have gone into the business have realized very large profits. The Shelby (Ky.) Sentinel says one man bought 210 hogs and corn to feed the same, for $3,263, fed and sold them, averaging 323 lbs., for the handsome sum of $6,640, and refused the offer of $954 for 111 shoats that he raised from them. Another man and his sons fed and sold 792 hogs averaging 305 lbs. upon which they made an outlay of about $9,000 for the round sum of $24,000.

—:o:—

FEEDING TOO MUCH CORN.—A correspondent of an Eastern paper, referring to the fact that pork is sometimes found of a yellow color, says that it results from the too free use of corn for food. He says that about the time hogs are finished off farmers often make a mistake in feeding too much unmixed grain. The result is bad digestion and yellow fat Mixed feed should be given to the last—roots, pumpkins, apples, with corn. As a rule, you can get them to eat more grain and take on more flesh than by a diet of rich food only.

Evening Words.

Come, stand by my knee little children,
Too weary for laughter or song,
The sports of the day are all over,
And evening is creeping along.
The snow-fields are white in the moonlight,
The winds of the winter are chill,
But under the shelter of roof-tree
The fire shineth ruddy and still.

You sit by the fire, little children,
Your cheeks are ruddy and warm;
But out in the cold of the winter
Is many a shivering form.
There are mothers that wander for shelter,
And babes that are pining for bread;
Oh, thank the dear Lord, little children,
From whose tender hand you are fed.

Come look in my eyes, little children,
And tell me through all the long day
Have you thought of the Father above us,
Who guarded from evil your way?
He heareth the cry of the sparrow,
And careth for great and for small;
In life and in death, little children,
His love is the truest of all.

Now go to your rest, little children,
And over your innocent sleep,
Unseen by your vision, the angels
Their watch through the darkness shall keep.
Then pray that the Shepherd, who guideth
The lambs that he loveth so well,
May lead you in life's rosy morning,
Beside the still waters to dwell.

A Turkish Beauty.

I enjoyed the pleasure this morning of being introduced to a very handsome Turkish lady, in order to give an opportunity of witnessing a perfect specimen of Oriental beauty. After a good deal of persuasion she allowed me to copy her profile. Her eyes and eye-lashes were intensely black, though I suspect the latter were stained of a deeper dye than the natural one. Her complexion was beautifully fair, with the slightest tint of carnation suffused over her face. Her lips! sweet lips! that made us sigh even to have seen such. Her glossy hair, which was bound with a kalemkier or painted handkerchief, representing a whole parterre of flowers, fell in loose curls upon her shoulders and down her back. She wore a short black velvet jacket, embroidered with gold lace; trousers of sky blue and under-jacket of pink crape, and one of those beautiful transparent shirts which ravish the beholder and "half reveal the charms they fain would hide."

A magnificent Persian shawl encircled her waist, which had nature's own form, never having been compressed by the cruel bandage of stays. Her feet were in slippers, and two or three ugly rings deformed her white and slender fingers, the nails of which were dyed with henna.—Around her neck she wore a double row of pearls, from which hung an amulet.—Her skin was very white and beautiful; the constant use of the dry vapor bath having reduced it to a fineness which I can only compare to a highly polished marble, and it looked as glossy and as cold. She was well pleased with the drawing I had made, and, on rising to go away, she put on her yellow boots over the beautiful white foot and ankle, which it was a sin to conceal; then, donning her cashmere and cloak, she bade us adieu, with a grace and elegance which few English ladies could equal. No wonder the Turks sigh for a paradise, when they believe heaven to to be peopled with houiss such as these. —Auldjo's Visit to Constantinople.

Teaching Children.

Be careful how you question children. We once asked, by way of illustration, "Boys, what would you think if I should offer you a new suit of clothes?" "Bully for you!" shouted a new street-boy. We heard an eminent teacher the other day, before a convention, giving a model lesson on Ruth. She wanted to bring out the kindness of Boaz in commanding the reapers to drop larger handfuls of wheat. "Now, children," said said, "Boaz did another very nice thing for Ruth, can you tell me what it was?" "Married her," said one of the boys. During the political excitement of 1864, Rev. Dr. Lothrop was trying to coax an audience of boys to say that Abraham was called God's friend. "What was Abraham called?" he asked. "Old Abe," squeaked a small boy on the front seat.—S. S. Teacher.

A COUNTRYMAN who had never paid more than twenty-five cents to see an exhibition, being in the city of New York on business thought he would step 'round and take a look at Niblo's "Forty Thieves." The ticketseller charged him one dollar and a quarter for the use of one of the cheapest seats in the theatre. Passing the pasteboard back, the countryman quietly remarked: "Keep it, Mister, I don't want to see the other thirty-nine," and out he marched, having taught and received a lesson.

A FELLOW, having a spite at a sausage maker, rushed into his shop, when crowded with customers, threw a large dead cat upon the counter, and said:

"This makes nineteen! We'll settle when you're not so busy!" and then made his exit. He was, of course, followed by the sausage-buyers, empty-handed.

I will have constantly on hand Flour by the barrel, or small quantity, to suit the purchaser's wish.

WHEAT, CORN and OATS bought at the Mill and Store in Chestertown.

I have for sale all kinds of

Groceries,

MEATS, FISH, POULTRY, BUTTER, LARD, POTATOES, &c.

TOBACCO AND CIGARS.

WANTED—All kinds of Country Produce, such as Butter, Eggs, Lard, &c., for which the highest market price will be paid in Cash or Goods.

CHOP FEED, of all kinds, suitable for horses and hogs, constantly on hand, for sale low.

GRAIN left at the Store will be taken to the Mill, ground, and brought back.

If it is wished, grocery stores will be supplied with Meal.

We pay Cash and sell for the same.
